Goat eat ivy, Mare eat oats. Our own reminiscences of such matters, and those of Shakespeare, may thus have been identical! Sloane, of the time of Charles I. Hic, hoc, the carrion crow, For I have shot something too low: And so on of others, fragments of old catches and popular songs being constantly traced in the apparently unmeaning rhymes of the nursery. Most of us have heard in time past the school address to a story-teller: Liar, liar, lick dish, Turn about the candlestick. Lyer, lyer, licke dish! The intention of the last speaker is sufficiently intelligible, but a future editor, anxious to investigate his author minutely, might search in vain for an explanation of licke dish. I had a little bonny nagg, His name was Dapple Gray; And he would bring me to an ale-house A mile out of my way. The same volume p. There was an old man had three sons, Had three sons, had three sons; There was an old man had three sons, Jeffery, James, and Jack. It is not improbable that Shakespeare, who has alluded so much and so intricately to the vernacular rural literature of his day, has more notices of nursery-rhymes and tales than research has hitherto elicited. It may, however, be worthy of remark, that the term pillicock is found in a manuscript Harl. English children accompanied their amusements with trivial verses from a very early period, but as it is only by accident that any allusions to them have been made, it is difficult to sustain the fact by many examples. The amusement itself is very ancient, and a description of it may be seen in Minucius Felix, Lugd. There cannot be a doubt but that many of the inexplicable nonsense-rhymes of our nursery belonged to antique recreations, but it is very seldom their original application can be recovered. The well-known doggerel respecting the tailor of Bicester may be mentioned as a remarkable instance of this, for it is one of the most common nursery-rhymes of the present day, and Aubrey, MS. The tailor of Biciter, He has but one eye, He cannot cut a pair of green galagaskins, If he were to die. This sport in other parts is called Dancing the Candle Rush. The rhyme of Jack Horner has been stated to be a satire on the Puritanical aversion to Christmas pies and suchlike abominations. It forms part of a metrical chap-book history, founded on the same story as the Friar and the Boy, entitled, "The Pleasant History of Jack Horner, containing his witty tricks, and pleasant pranks, which he played from his youth to his riper years: The pleasant history commences as follows: A pretty boy of curious wit, All people spoke his praise, And in the corner would he sit, In Christmas holydays. Here we have an important discovery! Who before suspected that the nursery-rhyme was written by Jack Horner himself? Such, however, is the fact, and when Howell published his collection of Proverbs in 1709, p. On the same page of this collection we find the commencement of the rigmarole, "A man of words and not of deeds," which in the next century was converted into a burlesque song on the battle of Culloden!
