

1: Ways to Transform Your Life by Wayne W. Dyer

"There are more ways than one to skin a cat," so are there more ways than one of digging for money. Charles Kingsley used one old British form in Westward Ho! in "there are more ways of killing a cat than choking it with cream".

However, animals represent one of the biggest threats to humans in terms of spreading disease. In fact, more than 75 percent of all emerging, infectious diseases are zoonotic, or transmitted from animals to humans. One of the most important things that we can do now, as well as in a survival situation, is to be cautious when handling animals or interacting with their habitats.

Hookworms These parasitic worms grow in the small intestines of a variety of mammals, including cats and dogs. The most-common route of exposure is from feces-to-skin contact, particularly when walking in areas where animals have defecated. Eggs and larvae can burrow into the skin where they feed, grow and thrive for weeks before they die off.

Tapeworm We often associate tapeworm infections with eating contaminated or under-cooked pork. However, tapeworms are common in all vertebrates, including fish, poultry and beef products. Tapeworms can grow to more than 50 feet in length, and they can also survive in the intestines of a host for more than 30 years. The most-common signs of an infection include diarrhea, abdominal pain and a loss of appetite. However, there have been some cases where tapeworms make their way to the brain, and this can lead to a host of neurological problems in addition to severe, persistent headaches.

Toxoplasmosis The Toxoplasma gondii parasite is one of the most-common in the world, and infections are usually caused from eating undercooked meat or coming into contact with cat feces. Fortunately, the majority of people who become infected will never develop any symptoms. However, those with compromised immune systems can develop life-threatening or chronic conditions that may be difficult to treat. The infection can also be passed from a mother to her child during pregnancy, putting both at risk.

Cryptosporidiosis This infection comes from exposure to a common parasite that is found in water, soil as well as in the feces of a variety of animals. Symptoms of infection include severe, watery diarrhea, nausea and vomiting, fever, severe stomach cramps, dehydration and weight loss.

Leptospirosis This is a bacterial infection that is passed through the urine of a wide-range of mammals. Infections occur after coming into contact with urine, or anything, including soil, that may have been contaminated. Symptoms include the rapid onset of a high fever, chills, muscle aches, vomiting, abdominal pain, diarrhea, skin rash and redness of the eyes. It can take up to 3 weeks for symptoms to emerge after exposure, and left untreated, it can take months before the infection is resolved. Keep in mind that this is not an exhaustive list, and there are hundreds of other zoonotic pathogens that can cause a variety of health problems in humans. Fortunately, you can significantly-reduce the chances of exposure by following basic guidelines such as properly handling and cooking meat or wearing gloves and mask when working the soil or around areas where animal waste may be present. Remember that prevention is key, and following these simple steps can help you and your family to avoid getting sick in the midst of a crisis.

2: Common Diseases Transmitted from Animals to Humans – Ways to Survive

Q From Mike Reilly: Anything interesting in the origin of There's more than one way to skin a cat?. A To a lexicographer, all phrases are interesting, it's just that some of them are more interesting than others.

We can do better! Have a pyjama party In bed. Just you, something or someone to snuggle, a laptop, notebook or sketchpad, some rad music, a good movie, and a hot cup of chocolate. My favorite sushi is avocado, cream cheese and pineapple. Eat your sushi sitting on the floor watching kung fu, Japanese horror, or a good ole-fashioned anime tentacle scene. Send Postcards Buy a packet of ten postcards and send a note to your friends – even the ones you see every day. Tell them how awesome you think they are, and how much you love hanging out with them. Or, if you want to be less sappy, just quote some Manowar lyrics and tell them they smell. Share the Cookie Wuv You are going to a gig at the local bar. Bake a batch of cookies and bring them along to share. You have now made 50 new friends. Poetry Find poems you like and hang them on your wall or write them on your diary. Every time I read words fitted together like an intricate puzzle, I feel like the whole world is magic. Even old Aliester Crowley created remarkable imagery. Dress Up Create outfits of ridiculous clothes and accessories to do mundane tasks. Walk the dog in your bondage pants and Pantera shirt, vacuum the house in a tutu and high heels, buy milk at the store in nothing but a trench coat. Make Magic Everyday Learn a magic trick – it could be something as simple as a card trick or a slight-of-hand. You deserve to experience happiness every day. Click To Tweet 8. Star-i-fy your life Buy a packet of glow-in-the-dark stick-on stars you know the ones. Laugh Watch a DVD of one of your favorite stand-up comedians. Here be my favorites: The Royal Bedchamber Make a canopy and coronet for your bed. Go to the fabric store and choose luxurious fabrics – chintz and brocade and lace and satin – in your favorite colours. Gather them on the ceiling and tie them to the corners of your bed. You can attach curtain rods to the ceiling to create a dramatic canopy. If you have any leftover fabric, make a few simple pillows to match. You are now a princess. Make a Paper Hat Wear a paper hat. Why not design a paper bowler hat, beret or top hat? I have a mini-top hat with a flower I made entirely from Braille paper, which I do wear out on occasion. Hell, what have you got to lose? Indulge in Bathtime Run yourself a bath. Take the phone off the hook, put up a do-not-disturb sign, pour yourself a glass of wine or mead, put on some relaxing music, and read a book, or stare at the ceiling. But sometimes, you just need a break from the world. Pack your tent and billy and find a corner of the wilderness unpopulated with human life. Relish the stillness of a world untouched by urban living. In the clarity of fresh air, all your muddled thoughts sometimes become crystal clear. Fly a Kite I never forget the thrill of a kite soaring through the sky, tugging at the string in a desperate attempt to be free. Better yet, make your own kite. Add Trim Find one of those treasure-trove fabric and trimming shops with hundreds of bits of old lace and rooms of buttons and bins of fabric offcuts. Take them home and decorate a hat, headband, bag, necklace or bag. Midnight Snackage Invite someone over for a midnight snack – someone who makes you laugh so hard your stomach hurts. Eat nachos from the plate together and giggle. Last night, a friend and I stayed up late watching old favorites from our DVD collection and eating apple and rhubarb crumble. All day, every day. Wear Bells Wear bells around your ankles. You can buy ankle bells at medieval markets. I love them, although you can never sneak up behind someone to surprise them. Then buy yourself a little treat. Plus you loose out on the smelling – the smelling is the important part. But it should also be fun. Buy yourself a water bottle – not one of those one-use plastic ones, but something fun, like stainless steel masterpiece or a skull-shaped bottle. Or find yourself a beautiful vintage glass bottle and use that. Out, out, dammed spot! Quote Shakespeare at inappropriate moments. Or why not go against the grain and read some Ben Johnson or Thomas Marlowe instead? They were bloody good, too. Seriously, laugh out loud funny, especially if you have a passing knowledge of ancient Greek culture and mythology. Try the Lysistrata, a play about a group of wives who are desperate to stop the war between Athens and Sparta and bring their husbands home to sleep with them – so desperate, they declare a SEX STRIKE until the war is over. Buy or make an amazing gift – like a mix CD of your favorite songs or a beautiful box of chocolates – and wrap it in a big box with a pretty ribbon. Watch how long it takes before someone picks it up. Create better, funnier passwords

Change your passwords on your email, your bank, your paypal account, everything, to words that make you smile. Banana, elocution, evisceration, duped, muggle, flippant, pumpkmen, snooty, sneed, salacious – the possibilities are endless! Swing it Find a playground in your area. Swing on the swings. Better yet, if you have a backyard with a tree, build a swing for yourself. I used to be afraid of thunderstorms, until I started telling myself I loved them: Now I love them. To the Theatre Go and see a play. No, not a movie. An actual display of live theatre. You can find descriptions of plays on theatre websites – local productions cost about the same as a movie ticket, and they often give student discounts. You could travel even further from the norm and try the ballet. Start emailing them and making contact. Tell them how they touched your life and inspired your own creativity, which of their works had the greatest impact on you, what you think of their latest project. Ask their opinion on matters concerning the world and point them in the direction of your own work. You never know, you might even get a reply! Join the Library I lived in Auckland for four and a half years before I joined the public library, and, although I had access to the university library, I regret my sojourn from fiction books. Plus, you can use the Internet there for free, and they run fun events and readings and competitions. Live in the real world totally and utterly for a week. Sometimes I feel as though we live too much of our life online, and we make contacts, but no real connections. Here are 23 free fun, technology-free, screen-free adventures. Write Haiku The very act of focusing your thoughts into a haiku relaxes and empowers you. Write all your emails in haiku. Well, find something cooler. What about this fleur-de-lys Stone Hinged wallet? Or this Steampunk Gear leather wallet? Or a gothic cigarette tin wallet? Re-create your Food Lust Think of your favorite food at your favorite restaurant. Now, scour the Internet and all the fancy cookbooks for a likely recipe. Buy all the fresh ingredients and attempt to make your fave dish at home. Practice your Green Thumb Buy a weird plant and take care of it. By weird, I mean a deadly nightshade or Venus flytrap or sarracenia or nepenthes. Re-vocabise During my second year of uni, a friend and I embarked on an important and dangerous mission: After awhile, your brain gets sick of being interrupted all the time and you stop saying them. It worked for a good two or three years. Learn Braille Yes, you read correctly. Also, you learn something of what it would be like to lose one of your senses.

You used the skin for the head and the cat gut for the strings. A prime candidate for banjo components would be the old barn mouser that was old and no longer earned its keep. If you want a good example, read the book "Storming Heaven".

She was sipping a mixed drink from a straw. Something made her laugh and she blew into the glass and the drink poured out. I wanted to talk to this girl so I desperately searched my mind for something witty to say. I drew a blank. I squeezed in to order my drink. My mind, still trained to make the same mistakes I talked about earlier, is now racing to find something funny to follow up with. While the bartender was handing me my drink, one of her friends turned and asked me some question. I then turned into the group of three girls. I said something that made the group laugh. Not stupid drunk, but buzzed enough to know she was a little drunk. Later in the conversation she starts telling me a story about something that had happened to her the night before. She is excited about the story and talking quite fast. She trips over a word or two. What I learned during that interaction was that flirting is just as much non verbal as it is verbal. And I want to share these flirting tips with you: Timing Subtleness Facial expressions and glances Every interaction has a beat. And once you learn to get in tune with the beat of an interaction, your social intelligence will appear to sky rocket. The great stand up comedians have mastered the art of timing. Rent videos of some of the all time greats and study how they use timing. When the woman at the bar spilled her drink I waited for the right moment. I simply waited for the inevitable moment that our eyes met, and subtly shook my head. And the dance began. Flirting with women is a skill you must learn if you want to seduce them. But, there are more than one ways to skin a cat. These are some of the best flirting tips I can give you. It will give you a crash course education in how to flirt.

Keeping your cat safe takes much more than just slapping on a collar. Cats are curious creatures always getting into mischief. This is why we love them, of course, but it also means that they can endanger their own safety in the course of innocent play.

February 11, 9: The bank always cashes them, so it must be correct. This is the one thing I remember from second grade. One hundred one means Disney prefers the former but I prefer the latter. Nobody will crucify you for using one or the other or both interchangeably. Honestly, I think either is acceptable in colloquial usage. I have never heard of "and" being taken to mean a decimal place. One hundred one it is. I say "one hundred and one"; "one hundred one" feels distinctly US-English or perhaps North American English, along with "x hundred" for four-figure numbers and "point twenty-seven" as opposed to "point two seven" for. If you want to be technical, then in the US we learn either in middle school math or in "life skills" that the "and" indicates the decimal separation. So you would write "One hundred one dollars and one cent. Ontario, Canada posted by PercussivePaul at 9: Does anyone hear "one hundred and one" and actually interpret it to mean If someone means But they both seem fine. This is in the US. I would say "one hundred and one thousand". I was going to say a similar thing - I never heard "one hundred one" until I moved from Ireland to the states. No, which is why I explained that in "one hundred and one", the word "and" usually indicates summation. Yes, even in the United States. One hundred-one, one hundred-two, one hundred-three" and so on. This parallels the structure for counting in the tens place: As in "There are ways to skin a cat. In the USA it is more common to omit it, but with "and" is still acceptable. Anything about "and" referring to a decimal point, as in " Notice how it is unclear where the decimal point would start if you said "and one". Is it one tenth or one hundredth? More appropriately you can consider "and" as a plus sign, as in, one hundred plus one. Born and raised in NYC. However, I cannot imagine that anyone would confuse and I do recall a childhood quiz that asked what was the first whole number that had an "A" in it, and the answer was "one thousAnd" because "and" should not be used. Shakespeare himself used both:

5: Advice for a political hot spot: Dealing with the Medical Establishment in Australia

Well the truth is that there are ways to skin a cat which means you will never run out of ways to do something if it's really worth it. Here is just some the tips on ways to get a girl who seem out of your league.

If you have a hard time using soft eyeliner pencils, draw a thick line onto your hand, use a stiff eye brush to pick up the pigment and then apply to your eye. Breathe air in through your nose as you drop them into your eyes. Your tear ducts will suck in the drops before they have a chance to fall down your face. Use a flesh colored liner on the water rim of your lower lash line to make eyes look bigger and brighter. Apply a shimmery champagne color in the inner corner of your eyes to brighten your whole face. Apply highlighter onto your brow bone. Swap out your neutral black or brown liner for a brightly colored one instead. Apply concealer to your under-eye circles after foundation not before to better camouflage them. To correct eye makeup mistakes or sharpen a cat eye, dip a Q-tip in eye makeup remover and erase the offending makeup. To make your eye color stand out, apply black liner around the entire eye, including the water line. Instead of swiping on eye shadow, press the color into your eyelid with a brush or finger. This will give your lids a more pigmented look. Keep a clean eye shadow brush or Q-tip in your purse. Whenever you touch up your makeup, run it over your lids to get rid of any excess shadow that has collected in the crease. Use blue eyeliner to make the whites of your eyes appear brighter. Apply eye cream under the eyes and onto the lid before applying your makeup. It will make it go on smoother. For a dramatic eye, apply darker shadow to the crease, as well as a small triangle of color at the outside corner of your eye. Use coconut oil as an all-natural eye makeup remover. Apply products to your delicate eye area using your ring finger, which uses less force than your other fingers. To get a classic smoky eye look, combine a little bit of shimmer, tons of dark eye shadow and a whole lot of smudging. Use a darker shade of concealer to cover up puffy eyes. Darker colors recede, which means bags look less pronounced. If you want a more defined look, use a creamy black eye pencil to rim your eyes. You can use darker shades of nude and brown to create a subtle smoky eye look that works on everyone. The most important rule when wearing a smoky eye is that if you go dark, keep the rest of your face soft. Use two colors that are similar but different like light purple and dark purple on the lids to create dimension. If your eyes are brown, use navy blue shadow to really make them stand out. For a unique look, dab a brightly colored cream shadow on the inner corners of your eyes. If you have blue eyes, apply a peach color all over your lids and underneath your eyebrows to really make them stand out. To further blend a smoky eye, swipe the same color you use on your lids on your bottom lash line. Rub an ice cube over puffy eyes in the morning to reduce swelling. Apply a light colored, cream-based shimmery shadow to the eyelid to open the eye. Change out your mascara every three months. Never use liner in the inner first third of the eye; it will make eyes seem closer set. If you have green eyes, try out purple eye shadow shades such as lavender, violet, or amethyst. For eyeliner, a deep plum is perfect. Create a triangle of opaque white shadow in the inside corner of the eye and up towards the brow to instantly change the shape of your eye. You may be allergic. Apply a primer before eye shadow to give it lasting power and to intensify the color. If you have blue eyes, go for a warm copper, burnished gold, or rich brown eye shadow. Chocolate is an excellent shade choice for eyeliner. Pair a black liner with pale eye shadow all over the lid and a darker shade in the crease to make the eyes pop. If you have brown hair, use peach and warm neutrals on the eyes. Dark eye shadows can be applied with a damp, thin brush on the upper or lower lash line for a defined eye that will last all day. Since dark makeup can make the eyes recede, add depth with shimmery highlight shades. Start with a tiny bit of product on your brush, and work it outward to create a soft smoke. Erase hard lines of eye shadow by blending in with a brush. Then, take your pinky or a sponge tip applicator and just dab on a bit of a neutral shadow to soften the look. Beware of brown eye shadow shades that are reddish, as they can make you look tired or worse hungover. When drawing a cat eye, follow the outer bottom lash line upward to get the perfect line. If you have a hard time drawing a straight line of eyeliner at the base of the lids, draw dashes and connect by smudging the liner with a Q-tip. When creating a cat eye, keep applying eyeliner past the length of your eyebrow. Use a palette of stone grey shades for a smoky cat eye. For a daytime cat eye, begin at the inside of the eyelid and drag the liquid liner applicator all the way across the lid to the outside of the eye. When you get to the outside of the eye, move the applicator up and out to create a wing effect. Do not make this line any longer than an eyelash to keep it from being too dramatic. If you want a daytime-appropriate cat eye, apply a layer of shadow, draw on your cat eye, wait for it to dry, then apply another layer of shadow to tone it down. Tilt your chin up but look down at a mirror when drawing your cat eye. Make your cat eye bold by drawing it on with a bright color, instead of your basic black or brown. Use a lash primer before mascara to make lashes look bigger and thicker. Use a small mascara brush on your lower lashes, as well as the lashes near the inner corner of your eyes. A tinier brush makes it easier to grab onto the smaller lashes. Try out false lashes. They make your eyes look bigger. Apply a dark kohl liner to the root of your lashes to make them appear fuller. Skip mascara on the bottom lashes to make eyes appear lifted. No need to stop at one coat of mascara! Wait for the first coat to dry, then apply another. If you wear glasses, go with a lengthening mascara instead of a volumizing one, which can look clumpy when magnified by lenses. When applying mascara, as you move the brush up slightly turn it outward to fully separate lashes. You want the liner to look like a part of your lashes. Layer individual false eyelashes along the top lash line. Use black mascara on the top lashes and brown on the bottom. For extra long lashes, place the tip of the mascara brush on the outer corners of your lashes first, do a few strokes, then work your way in. Extending those corner lashes will make your eyes look more open. Place the mascara wand at the very base of your lash, then, using a side-to-side motion, wiggle the wand upwards in one long, even stroke. When using a lash curler, clamp down at the base, move the curler out, clamp down, move the curler to the ends and clamp down again. Use a metal-toothed lash comb to help separated clumped lashes. Highlight under the eyes to brighten the face and bring attention to the eyes. It pushes air in, which can create clumps. If your lashes are already clumped, take a spiral brush and remove the mascara by swirling against the lashes. If your lashes are thin, dust them with translucent powder before applying mascara to add bulk.

Tips For Better Brows

When filling in brows, make tiny hair-like marks with your brow pencil for a more realistic look. Use a primer on your eyebrows before applying pencil or powder. Use clear mascara to groom your brows and keep them in place. When plucking eyebrows, be sure to pluck in the direction of the hair. Otherwise, you could end up with an ingrown hair. If your brows are sparse, try combing them downward instead of up after you fill in with pencil. This way, the hair will cover the pencil marks and create a more natural finish. The highest point of the brow should be about two-thirds of the way out, not in the middle of the brow. Make sure brows start at the bridge of your nose. If you have a square-shaped face, go for a thick brow. If you have a round face, aim for a more defined brow arch to make your face appear more oval. If you have a long face, go for a straight, flat brow shape. Remember that brows are sisters, not twins, so no amount of plucking will ever make them identical. If your eyebrows are out of control, then brush them upward with a clear mascara and then trim them ever so slightly.

Advice for a political hot spot: Dealing with the Medical Establishment in Australia From: Doctor Mac, Australia Question: I have been asked out to lunch by Professor W. It seems likely that he wants to point out the error of my ways. He had osteosarcoma about 25 years ago and was given 2 weeks to live. He used "alternative therapies" and recovered minus a leg. I understand that in the early days he did upset the medical profession, was a pretty angry young man and did tell people to think twice before having conventional treatment etc. He advocates good diet, good attitude, meditation, exercise, laughter etc. Our programme is basically a well being programme, giving parents and children skills to cope with serious life threatening illness, and information on nutrition, meditation, self empowerment, raising immunity through laughter, massage etc. Do you have any basic advice about how to handle a luncheon like this???? I have always stayed out of the political arena, but cannot refuse to go out to lunch with the professor. I have already handled two other professors badly, trying to get them to see my point of view which was a waste of time. The lunch is very soon. Your situation sounds like a real challenge. His agenda may not be negative; for all you know he is curious how to deal with the foundation. When you are at lunch, ask questions. What are his interests in this situation? No less important, you should try to learn the interests he thinks exist in the personal or organisational minds of other stakeholders: Then, after you have had a chance to cogitate, you may be able to respond -- even to the point of advocacy of the holistic approach -- using terms and concepts the professor has raised in making his points. If you use his terminology, I suspect you may be more successful. Even if attacked, roll with the punches. Just sit there quietly absorbing the information, rather than the punishment. Then use the information as a tool to bring things forward. And perhaps do a joint interest map with the professor so you two can figure out the interests of all of the stakeholders in the outcome of your discussion. Good luck and good negotiating, Steve. ## 7: World Wide Words: More than one way to skin a cat

Your cat growled at you and his claws were out and thrashing towards the window. "No way, I'm not going to let you outside through there," you scolded him, "you're not allowed out after dark." You went to pull the blinds down but stopped when you smelt the stench that wafted through the crack in the window pane.

The first are physiological changes such as increase in heart rate. Next there is a behavioral response, do I stay or do I go – the tendency to escape from or stay in contact with whatever is causing the emotion. Lastly, the subjective experience of feeling angry, happy, or sad – or somewhere inbetween. Bloggers are no stranger to their own human emotions. The disgust in themselves seeing that their post has 0 likes, 0 tweets, 0 comments. That means zero love. Our goal is to elicit emotions that excite or repulse the reader so much that they have to share your article with their social network. The reader is looking for confirmation from their peers that the way they are feeling is justified. There are many types of human emotions. Here are seven that you can use to elicit sharing from your readers. Awe What is awe? A great way to inspire awe in your reader is to write something truly remarkable. This turn of phrase is just awful by the way. Anger Source Anger is one of the basic negative human emotions also epitomized in birds, apparently joke. You see, you would have filled them with awe! Really rile them up! Fear triggers the part of our brains that exists solely for our physical survival. Joy One of my favorite positive human emotions. For instance, the video at the bottom of this page brings me a lot of joy deep in the cockles of my heart. Joy can be anything uplifting, funny or inspiring. Then you get the power. Then you get the women. Of course, many people lust after sex or any intimate contact. Others lust after food. Personally, I lust after anything chocolate. You can challenge assumptions or prove them wrong. You can give away something for free unexpectedly. Can you identify all 7 emotions being elicited while watching this video? You can thank me later.

As in "There are ways to skin a cat." If you are writing something serious and for whatever reason really need to start the sentence with a big number like , then the correct way to express it is "Follow the relevant style guide."

So, how can we live a simple life in a fast-paced, complex world? Avoid debts, if at all possible. Avoid costly medical bills by adopting a whole foods, plant-based diet. Prep meals for the week ahead of time. Make your own beauty and hygiene products at home. Only keep the clothes you actually wear, and give away the rest. Start a garden, compost your food, and cut down on your weekly grocery bill. Every time you buy something new, get rid of something old. Have designated days to do laundry. Drop your cell phone plan , and use the Wi-Fi in your home or Internet cafes instead. Live closer to nature. Live within your means. Adopt an attitude of gratitude. Smile like you mean it. Have a set time each day to check social media and stick to it. Cancel your cable bill if you rarely watch TV. Spend time outdoors as much as possible. Let go of the past, and live in the present. Try to use natural remedies for ailments when possible. Try to buy energy-efficient appliances. Automate your bill payments. Listen more than you talk. Laugh at least 30 times a day. Take relaxing baths in Epsom salt and lavender oil. Have friends who inspire you. Distance yourself from energy vampires. Write down your goals, and go after them. Pack what you need for a flight in a carry-on bag only to avoid baggage fees. Consider buying a used car instead of new. Downsize when you can. Become a warrior, not a worrier. Turn your passion into your job. See if you can work from home if possible. Spend at least one day a week entirely in nature. Speak gently to people. Make your own dog or cat food for pets cheaper and healthier. Buy locally grown produce. Only buy new things when old things break. Avoid letting your emails pile up. Organize your computer files. Limit your time on social media. Go with the flow. Tackle problems before they get out of hand. Say what you mean, and mean what you say. Have a home gym to avoid paying for a gym membership. Or, make nature your gym.
