After last year was so underwhelming and frustrating it felt like things were starting on the same path again this year. No horse could seem to carry momentum forward from one race to the next. This year the problem was that we had a deep and talented class, and the horses were in tough every time they went out. So, now that the field is set and we know which 20 horses are aiming for the Derby we have the deepest and most talented field we have had in a very long time. The top-end talent is spectacular - potentially historic - and there is no shortage of other contenders. There are a whole lot of horses that would have beaten Always Dreaming last year if a trip back in time was possible. And that means that a lot of good horses are going to finish well down the board in this race. I like Brisnet speed figures, but the story is the same no matter what you look at. Since the turn of the century we have seen just three other horses that have hit or more - Fusaichi Pegasus in , Funny Cide in and Big Brown in And all three of those horses won the Derby - and two also won the Preakness. Now, there are plenty of issues. No horse since has won the Derby without a race at age 2. But this is an exceptional horse, and he is justified sorry about that as the favorite. A bit more on the Brisnet numbers. The big knock against this horse is that horses from Dubai have not been relevant in the Derby. His speed figures would indicate he has the potential to easily be a winner. And while he is fast and talented, he was beaten by both Justify and McKinzie before a bad disqualification in his two races this year. Yet he might not be good enough here. Heck, he might not even be the best horse in the ridiculously strong Pletcher stable. Like Justify, this is an unbeaten colt who did not race as a two-year-old, so he has a lot of history to overcome. His Arkansas Derby win was one of those races that was very visually impressive at the time and then became less impressive when you looked at how the race played out. Most years he would be the favorite. This year he could easily fly under the radar. His connections are brilliant - Chad Brown and Jose Ortiz are both going to win a Derby or three before they are done - so there is a fair bit to like here. This is another Curlin son and another runner from the Pletcher stable. Davis before that were both major disappointments for me. He showed a whole lot of heart and toughness down the stretch last time, so he could be ready to exert himself in the stretch here. That win was mostly circumstantial - he was there to pick up the pieces when My Boy Jack all but stopped in the stretch. Those are the same connections as American Pharoah, so he is worth a look for that. He won the Gotham and then was a solid second in the Wood Memorial. Godolphin Stables, who owns him, have won pretty much everything in the world besides the Derby, so they are certainly hungry. But his breeding is solid, and there is a whole lot of upside. Probably too much too soon for the colt but worth a look at this price - at least for exotics. This Mark Casse colt has a first and two seconds in three solid graded stakes this year, so he has shown consistency. I like the horse at the price. What makes him really interesting, though, is that he is a son of Scat Daddy - one of the last crop of that sire who died far too young. Scat Daddy was a late bloomer as a stud - he also has Justify, Mendelssohn, and first alternate Combatant in this field. Want free Kentucky Derby picks for ?
