M-3 is a north-south state trunkline highway in the Detroit metropolitan area of the US state of Michigan. For most of its length, the trunkline is known as Gratiot Avenue (/ ˈ ɛ ː r ɪ t /, GRASH-it).

Abutting the northern shore of Lake Erie between Windsor and Fort Erie, the route deviates in places to bypass towns and to avoid the less than direct trail laid nearly two centuries ago. From there, a Thomas at the southern end of Highway 4 and travels The central and eastern sections are divided by a 3. The five lane highway travels southeast through Windsor along Huron Church Road, surrounded by residential subdivisions, then curves east along Talbot Road. The now four-laned route becomes divided as it follows the Essex Bypass around the southern edge of Essex , with commercial services lining the highway, primarily on the north side. Returning to farmland and narrowing to a two lane undivided road, the highway continues southeast, passing nearby, but avoiding, several small communities that the original highway travelled through. Thomas and south of London. Thomas, becoming a two-laned expressway aptly named the St. Thomas to Centennial Road, featuring a single interchange. It then curves east and travels parallel to the St. From Simcoe to Canborough, the highway is nearly straight as an arrow, with an occasional jog to the northeast. At Cayuga it crosses the Grand River ; [4] until , a five-span steel girder bridge crossed the river, but it has since been replaced by a concrete structure. The combined length of these segments is As the highway progresses eastward into the town, the surroundings gradually become more urbanized before it ends at Rosehill Road. Work is ongoing to bypass this bottleneck with a six lane freeway. Thomas Talbot , an influential scion who joined the British army at the age of 11, would challenge the government, the terrain, and the forces of nature to see to it that his road be built. Due to his family legacy, Talbot worked through the ranks quickly and found himself a personal aide to John Graves Simcoe , the first Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada. He returned to England after Simcoe fell ill, but vowed to return to the hinterland he had come to love. Talbot returned to England in and spoke to the legislature, promoting his concept of a vibrant farming settlement. Wishing to expand his grant and create his ideal colony, Talbot sought out new settlers; a road was required. John Bostwick would survey the route that year; however, funding shortages would halt construction in He insisted that a road would increase the value of the land in the surrounding townships, as well as providing a greater incentive for newcomers to settle in what was otherwise a desolate wilderness. Gore instructed deputy surveyor Mahlon Burwell to "Build a road one chain wide, laid out on the principle of Yonge Street with lots on each side. By then, a road was already opened between Port Talbot and Talbotville Royale. Workers followed an old Native American trail, wholly consumed by nature, between Delhi and Port Talbot. To get across the numerous swamps, felled trees were laid across the path to create a corduroy road , much to the chagrin of settlers. The outbreak of the War of would temporarily halt further construction. When it resumed in , Talbot himself began directing the surveyor, ordering that the road remain on the highest ground possible. By , the corduroy logs had been removed and the road improved and extended from Amherstburg to Canborough. Like many early roads in Upper Canada, it was built along a river bank. It can therefore be assumed that this trail was built prior to the completion of the Feeder Canal in Dundas Street or Yonge Street , it travelled in a straight line, in this case parallel to the Lake Erie shoreline. The first was an adjustment to the eastern terminus. Thomas Expressway, a super two highway built in the late s. It then travelled north through Welland and east along Lundys Lane. Plans were completed in as part of a province-wide program to bypass small towns on busy provincial highways. Thomas Expressway[ edit ] The lone interchange on the St. Thomas Expressway; note the unused right span of the overpass, designed to accommodate future expansion The St. Thomas expressway was built along the northern edge of that city beginning in The MTO consequently transferred many highways to lower levels of government in and , removing a significant percentage of the provincial highway network. Numerous attempts by local and provincial politicians since then have led the MTO to begin remedying the situation by upgrading the bypass to a divided four lane road and constructing the Windsor"Essex Parkway to a new international crossing. From there, it will turn northwest and follow a
