These words commonly appear in many state standardized tests. The word list originates from "The Word Up Project."

A great story also provides context and illustrations for learning a new word. Use Rich Language Become aware of the language you use with your child. Often parents will simplify how they speak hoping it will help their child more easily understand what they mean. Give your child every advantage and be intentional by being specific with the words you choose. Your effort will expand their world of knowledge! Observe the weather conditions then report back to us your predictions for the day! Children whose parents used complex language were found to have significantly higher IQs a formidable 40 points than children whose parents did not – suggesting that young brains become wired early for complex thought. After reading a page, make sure to ask your child if they understood a word that appeared tricky or challenging. Describe how you figured out the word. It said the club appointed the girl to be their president. It sounds like they gave her the job with a big responsibility. Have you ever been appointed to do something by your teacher? Can they connect this new word to something they have experienced? If the teacher sends a note home about the themes for the week, use those words. If students are learning about solids, liquids and gasses in science, ask them to tell you what those words mean. Then I warm it up on the stove and its becomes liquid again. If I boil it too long, the liquid begins to evaporate into the air as steam. You can see it steaming up from the pot and fogging up the window. Take turns when talking with them. As parents, we sometimes can get in a habit of giving instructions but not engaging in conversations with our kids. Having meaningful discussions at home helps children develop their vocabulary by allowing them to incorporate the new words they have learned into their conversations.

3rd Grade Spelling Word Lists Third grade spelling words can be challenging but they set the foundation for a more expanded academic vocabulary for transitioning from primary elementary grades (K-2) into intermediate elementary grades ().

Acquire and use accurately grade-appropriate conversational, general academic, and domain-specific words and phrases, including those that signal spatial and temporal relationships e. Unit Introduction The lessons housed within this unit all provide practice on specific skills or strategies. Still others were designed to give students meaningful practice while I conducted required testing. In these next seven lessons, we tackle identifying fictional elements, describing main characters, summarizing, and making connections between texts by comparing and contrasting characters. The pain and the great one. New York, New York. My rotten redheaded older brother. Activity Appropriate Selections All week long we have used the text, The Pain and the Great One, to examine characters and discuss fictional elements. Today, I introduce vocabulary task cards and six important words from the text. Included in the resources are the vocabulary word list used with students, a work mat, and the vocabulary task cards. You can use the list several ways - leave copies in your word work station for students to use with task cards, give each student a copy to cut and match terms to definitions, post on your word wall, include in your homework packets, etc. The vocabulary task cards are generic and can be used with any list. I make two copies of these on cardstock, laminate, put on rings, and place in my word work center. Because this is the first time using the cards, I complete this activity in partnerships and small groups before placing in a center. Each student gets a copy of the list and work mat along with one task card to share with a partner. They read the card together and complete their work on their given sheets. I give them about minutes to work on their task. When their time is up, I have each partnership get up and find another couple so that students are now sitting together. Each partnership gives their card to the other and then read the card given to them. One group shares their work while the other keeps an eye on the task card. The group listening decides if the group that shared completed the entire card or just part of it. Then they reverse roles and the second group shares. I allow the small groups to work for roughly five minutes each. When the five minutes are up, students repeat the activity by going with their partner to join a new partnership. I allow this to continue until students have met with about half the class.
