

1: WELCOME TO MY BLOG: Leaky Cauldron

The Leaky Cauldron is not associated with J.K. Rowling, Warner Bros., or any of the individuals or companies associated with producing and publishing Harry Potter books and films.

What do you tell your best friend who just found out he would be sent to prison, a literal hell hole, for a crime no one would ever believe he committed. He was almost afraid to keep going now, what other horrors would he learn? Now, who more than anyone would want to go after Harry? Sirius just shrugged, with his arms still crossed on his chest, glaring moodily down at the book. He nodded in acceptance and apologized. Sirius backed off at once, but he still looked a mixture of peeved, confused and hurt all the same. Harry thought he understood why once James leaned his weight imperceptibly into his best friends. Harry very dearly wanted to offer comfort as well, but recognized he could do no more than give false reassurances like his mother that everything was going to be okay. What Sirius needed now was both Remus keeping him in check, and James support. No one here could think of much else about how wronged Sirius had been, but there was no way to fix it until they found out exactly what happened. Yet Harry insisted he must have met Sirius at some point, and he had no ill feelings towards him now, but was he trying to lie and sugar coat it? Looking quite pleased with himself now that he could keep a better eye on Sirius, James took up the book and read. He spent every morning inside the Leaky Cauldron just watching all of the customers interact, witches and wizards comparing their buys of the day, fascinating creatures who blended in, and at one point Harry was quite sure a hag eating raw meat. If someone had told him at the start of this book Sirius would turn out to be alive, he would have skipped around dancing with joy no matter what the reason, now that he did have his reason he wanted to vomit and scream all over again at the unfairness of it all. He declined against saying this aloud though, worried it would make Sirius feel all the worse, considering how much he flinched at his own name as well as he continued. Remus gave a weak, unamused chuckle, picturing some random person actually being afraid of a boy who had once cried all day because Remus had once accidentally turned his hair green, and it had taken a few seconds to correct the colour changing spell and put it right. Harry was now free to do his homework where he chose as well, and favoured doing it in the local ice cream shop where the owner, Florean Fortescue, was very knowledgeable about his essay and was prone to giving Harry free icecream. It became a real chore for Harry once he did visit Gringotts not to go out and empty his whole vault. He found himself wanting nearly everything he came across, including a lifelike model of the galaxy, which would have allowed him to quit his Astronomy class. James voice immediately spiked with glee, this could only mean something good. Remus leaned in eagerly as well, and Sirius finally looked almost normal again. What better way to distract him from something so horrible than his favourite sport. He had to squeeze himself inside the shop to find a new model broom on display. I thought the new Nimbus sounded fantastic, this must be even better! James froze, and glanced over at her with a very hurt look on his face. After a lively discussion of nearly every make and model, Lily almost regretted giving in to James, she found it so boring at one point she slipped out of the room to go in and check on baby Harry. James seemed to be winding down by the time she had reentered. All of you knew how to read and understand that because you learned Astronomy. We only use those more for traditional reasons now. You need to be able to know and understand this in a very particular frame of time, so if you want a career in Potions you must keep up with Astronomy. The shop owner was explaining to the crowd that this model was going to be the broom of choice for the Irish International team, and they were favoured to win the World Cup. Harry finally found a break in the crowd enough to read the title on a little plaque, The Firebolt. The boys spent just as long interrogating Harry on every detail he remembered of this broom, and Lily simply sat back and watched indulgently for a few minutes before cutting in again and trying to convince them to move on. James huffed and grumbled for a bit, but finally accepted. Sirius nodded like this made absolutely perfect sense to him, making Harry laugh anew. He did have some things he was required to buy though, like new school robes which were getting several inches too short. There were also his new textbooks for both his old classes, and his new ones Care of Magical Creatures, and Divination. He grit his teeth for a moment before forcing himself to go on in that same light tone as before, not willing to let his good mood be spoiled again so soon. Harry did get a surprise though, when he went to the bookshop and saw a window display of the Monster Book of Monsters. With two limbs missing? Guess this might have been it. Of course Hagrid would get chummy with a new Care of Magical Creatures teacher. Had he finally gotten a decent teacher, at least for DADA? Sirius released a surprised snort of laughter, picturing books fighting having never come to mind. He really had been presumptuous in his actions. From inside the cage came another tearing sound, coming from two of the books having pinned down a third and tearing its back off. The owner shoved a cane inside and forced them all apart, complaining of what a nightmare they were to have around. He led Harry over to the Divination section of the store, and Harry read the back of the book which detailed what he would learn, including palmistry and bird entrails. Harry gave him a pitying look, declining to mention that his own imagination might have made that black dog in the alley way bigger than it might have really been. The shop owner really did distract him by escorting Harry around to gather the rest of his books, but he was distracted as he left the shop and accidentally smacked into a few people on his way back to the Leaky Cauldron. Now all four of them were frowning, each taking a worried glance at Harry. He was still frowning at Sirius, a perturbed look on his face. Before he could let himself feel too much pity though, James absently gave him a nudge with his elbow, and Remus flicked his ear. Sirius was instantly distracted from his thoughts and instead was playfully grumbling about how his friends abused him. Looking into the mirror, he began to try and flatten his hair with nerves. The mirror spoke back that Harry was fighting a losing battle with that one. As the holiday continued to drag closer to the end, Harry began spotting some of his school friends, like the other Gryffindor boys Seamus Finnigan and Dean Thomas who stopped to have a chat with him. James released a surprised burst of laughter, personally he would have been flattered, but he could see the other side to that coin. He got up to go and have one last look at the Firebolt, James read that with nothing but fondness colouring his tone, knowing full well that was something he would have done too. He turned and found his two best friends waving over at him. Ron simply put that his Dad knew. Hermione brought up this very subject, asking if Harry had really blown up his aunt in an already stern voice. The four of them frowned at Harry sharply, not at all pleased this seemed to be the only explanation he was going to give his friends, but Harry was resolutely ignoring all eyes, and they admitted there was no since badgering him about it now. Now because of Sirius, they wondered if maybe they had taken too light of the situation before, but none of them said it out loud. Sirius was still looking all kinds of moody any time this subject came up, so James refused to linger on it too long. Ron just shrugged it off, saying it was because it was the Harry Potter. Then Ron told Harry that the lot of the Weasleys, and Hermione, were going to be staying at the Leaky Cauldron that night with Harry, so he could go to the train with them tomorrow. Harry said this was excellent. Then they all laughed a bit more as Harry blushed slightly at mimicking himself. Hermione proceeded to list every extra subject Hogwarts had to offer, including Muggle Studies. Hermione said that she wanted to see wizards point of view on them, it would be all sorts of interesting. He was picturing her come midterms and going to at least two professors to drop one of her extra classes just for a breath of fresh air, no one could keep up with that much! Instead saying that she had some leftover money and wanted to buy herself a birthday present, and Ron suggested a book. What he did have was Scabbers, his old rat, who was looking quite sickly himself. Harry led the way to the local Magical Animal shop where both of his friends could attend to their needs, and they walked inside to find a large assortment of every fascinating animal. Ron went up to the counter first while Hermione began browsing the owls, which came in every colour and breed. Ron just muttered that they were showing off. The woman switched tactics and instead offered Ron some medicine for Scabbers, calling it Rat Tonic. Harry and Ron tore after him, catching up to him curled up underneath a trashcan. Ron demanded to know what had attacked him, and Harry explained it was either a very large cat, or a very small tiger. They made their way back to the shop for Hermione who should have gotten her owl by now, only to find her walking out of the shop with the same cat in her arms. Both Sirius and Remus released surprised snorts of laughter at that lovely description. Lily huffed and gave him the stank eye. Despite her misgivings about Hermione buying that particular cat at that time, she had nothing against the actual animal. It was in its nature after all, and Sirius mocking it just annoyed her. When they got inside, he greeted Mr. Weasley at the bar, looking at the front paper where Sirius Black was still on display. James frowned and grit his teeth for a moment, annoyed at once all the good mood seeping right out of the room at this near constant reminder. He wanted more than anything right now to find out what had really happened to his best friend, but the repeating commentary on him was grinding his gears. Harry asked if there was any new news on him, but Mr. It was better than him being depressed anyways. Ron asked if whoever caught him would get a reward, Sirius opened, then quickly closed his mouth. Weasley snapped at his son not to go getting any ideas, and Harry noticed he looked a lot more tense than usual. James voice spiked a bit in confusion upon reading that. Why would it put extra strain on Arthur, or was it something else altogether? Most likely it was the second. Reminding them that it would most likely be the Azkaban guards who would catch up with him, Sirius shuddered so hard at those words, he nearly shook the whole couch with him. Those guards were one of the reasons he felt like fainting at the mere thought of where he was fixing to spend the next twelve years of his life in a very short amount of time. He waited until Sirius offered a weak, unreal smile, but at least he attempted it, giving James enough confidence to keep reading and pray for a change of subject.

2: The Leaky Cauldron Chapter 4, a harry potter fanfic | FanFiction

The Leaky Cauldron was a popular wizarding pub and inn located in London. It was the entrance to Diagon Alley and indirectly Knockturn Alley. The rear of the pub opened up onto a chilly courtyard that contains the entrance to both alley ways.

Synopsis[ edit ] Spoiler warning: Checking his booklist, he sees it is required for his Care of Magical Creatures class, which is a relief to Harry who was worried Hagrid wanted help with some new "pet". While looking for his Divination text, Harry sees Death Omens: Harry is not entirely successful in convincing himself that it is not a death omen. Ron and Hermione finally arrive the day before school starts. Ron has a new wand, while Hermione has three bags of books. She wants to buy an owl, while Ron is going to have the sickly Scabbers looked at, so they troop into the nearby Magical Menagerie pet store. When a large cat named Crookshanks tries to attack Scabbers, Hermione buys it, and also the rat tonic recommended by the clerk for Scabbers. At the Leaky Cauldron they meet Mr. Weasley. He mentions that Sirius Black is still at large, and the Ministry is putting all its efforts into capturing him. The other Weasleys sweep in: Weasley, Percy, who is now Hogwarts Head Boy and even more pompous than the previous year, if that is possible, the Twins, Fred and George, who try to take Percy down a notch by imitating his affected mannerisms, and Ginny. Weasley says the Ministry is providing cars to the train station. On the way, Harry overhears Mr. Weasley arguing about what Harry should be told about Sirius Black. Dementors, guards from Azkaban, have been placed around Hogwarts to protect Harry. Surprisingly, Harry is unconcerned and believes Black will not be any harder to deal with than Voldemort. The Dementors are more worrisome, however, as it appears he will have to somehow slip past them to get into Hogsmeade village. Analysis[ edit ] Three important plot elements unfold in this chapter. Understanding Fudge as a politician, we readers can now understand why Fudge so quickly dismissed the incident involving Aunt Marge, and also surmise that Harry is probably being closely guarded by Ministry wizards during his time in Diagon Alley. We have seen already that Crookshanks will attack Scabbers while ignoring the nearby caged rats, so it is likely this specific antipathy will continue. Just why Crookshanks seems fixated on Scabbers is puzzling. The reader should also note that Ron believes Scabbers is "looking poorly" before they visit the Magical Menagerie. The canine image that Harry first saw in Privet Lane now seems to be becoming a pattern, with the appearance of a similar image on the book cover. Harry of course suspects that he may be seeing death omens, but it is safe to assume this unlikely given that this is only the third book of a seven-book series. However, what the significance is, we have yet to find out. We find that, despite the worrisome death omens he is seeing, these concern him more than the possibility that Sirius Black may be hunting him. And though Harry is left on his own for the first time, we can guess that Ministry officials are remotely monitoring him until his return to Hogwarts. We can guess that they do not show themselves to him to prevent his wondering about the threat presented by Sirius Black, and suspect that the injunction to remain in Diagon Alley is to avoid having his monitors reveal themselves by their inept aping of Muggle ways. Until his return to Hogwarts, Harry is unencumbered by apparent adult supervision, restrictions, or interpretations. Rather than withdrawing a huge sum and frivolously buying whatever he wants, including the Firebolt broom he so admires, he carefully considers just how much he needs to cover his necessary school and living expenses. After being reunited with Ron and Hermione in Diagon Alley, Harry happily rejoins the Weasley family chaos as the children prepare to return to Hogwarts. Weasley warmly greet him, as do Ron and Ginny. All these familial interactions provide Harry with rare doses of the happy, cozy family life he so sorely craves. Review[ edit ] Why is Harry seemingly unconcerned when he learns that Sirius Black is looking for him? Why does Harry believe he is seeing Death Omens? What are they, and where specifically has he seen them? Why does Hermione buy so many books? Why is Scabbers looking so sickly? Why would such a "dangerous" book be assigned for the "Care of Magical Creatures" class? Who might have assigned it? Why was Harry actually relieved to see that the "Monster" book was on the school list? Is their replacement caption valid or is this just a mean-spirited prank on their part? How long before Percy is likely to notice? How does Ron feel about that? As Harry spends time alone in Diagon Alley, what comparisons and contrasts might he make between the Muggle and Wizarding realms? If Harry is so convinced he is seeing death omens, why does he fail to tie that to Sirius Black, who is supposedly hunting him? Weasley disagree about what Harry should be told regarding Sirius Black? Who is right, and just how much should Harry be told about this? Greater Picture[ edit ] Intermediate warning: Details follow which you may not wish to read at your current level. As Voldemort openly returns to power later in the series, we learn that Florean Fortescue has apparently been captured. One has to wonder why the Death Eaters would attack a harmless ice cream merchant, though his knowledge about medieval Wizardry, as evidenced when he helps Harry with his homework, could be a factor. This is left unexplained, however. Whatever fear Harry may have had about Hagrid having a new "pet" will likely be magnified many times over when he realizes the curriculum will probably include dangerous magical animals. This results in an extended estrangement between Ron and Hermione. This will be particularly upsetting for Hermione, who had just reconciled with both Harry and Ron following an unfortunate falling out she had with the two boys. It should be noted that Crookshanks is something other than an ordinary cat: We can guess, from events at the end of this book, that Scabbers will have joined the Weasley family some eleven years before this story, and this is significantly longer than the normal lifespan for rats, as the clerk points out. The student of literature will note that the author uses this form of indirection throughout the series when introducing key facts that she does not want the reader to notice. This will be the same picture that Ron had earlier sent in the letter that accompanied his birthday gift to Harry. It is actually someone else at Hogwarts that Sirius is seeking revenge against. However, this mistaken assumption that Harry is the target, and the associated beliefs concerning why Sirius was incarcerated, helps drive the story. The Firebolt broom seen in Diagon Alley becomes a plot point, starting at about Christmas, and it results in Harry and Ron being estranged from Hermione. She is immediately suspicious about who sent Harry the broom as an anonymous gift, and, fearing it may be cursed, reports it to Professor McGonagall, who confiscates it for examination. An interesting point one might note is that, up to now, the term "Azkaban Guards" is used, but after this chapter, it is never used again, with "Dementors" replacing it. From a story-telling point-of-view, however, it does not quite make sense as to why everyone suddenly drops the term "Azkaban Guards" after Harry finally learns what they are.

3: Places in Harry Potter - Wikipedia

Chapter 4 The Leaky Cauldron It took Harry several days to get used to his strange new freedom. Never before had he been able to get up whenever he wanted or eat whatever he fancied.

Tree full of loot. I thought we were leaving. He paced robustly through the snow plowing something of a walkway with his body. Harry was slightly jealous at his physical ability before remembering the odd quirk Remus had. Harry promised himself that he was not jealous of a man that could change his form at will. It could have been planted only for photo shoots and in the crisp afternoon frost was evaporating off its branches in the sunlight. It will be extremely dangerous for him. Muggles are no longer treated very well by our kind. New world order and all. He searched for the words to adequately form a good question "when he opened his mouth he was only able to question the obvious. They kill people for fun. It seemed strange to him that such a small population, or what he assumed would be a small population, would work against each other and effectively destroy their numbers. It was amazing that fighting seemed to be happening underneath the relative peace normal people had been enjoying for half a century. But they have the greatest evil to walk on their side. So why am I necessary again? He held his breath, he had a suspicion that everything would soon be pinned on him and he would need to save the world. It was a dream really, he had had over the years; just like anyone else who grew up with a large dose of fantasizing and video games. Was his first reaction. No pretty girl at the end. He was probably going to die. I did punch a kid in the face once on accident though. Your parents died that night. Layers of wood appeared to be peeling back from the tree. We think he began to take steps to deal with those somethings. Dumbledore died in the spring of in Albania. The fall of Hogwarts a few years ago made it that much harder. The tree stopped warping revealing a stone platform at its base. Glowing blue lines on the inside of the cored out tree pulsed with light and life. The Dursleys should have been his family. They should have loved him. Remus opened his eyes and to Harry they seemed wetter than before. Dumbledore had you somewhere safe and secure "but he disappeared the spring before what would have been your first year at Hogwarts. Only two others knew of where you were: Almost to quiet for Harry to hear. The snow on the ground muffled all sounds; they seemed encased in a bubble untouched by the world. It was quite chilly. Hagrid was sent to an internment camp for being an abomination when the world flipped over later that year. He is believed dead. McGonagall spent one year as headmistress before the coo happened and she was murdered in her office while protecting a student. The werewolf motioned for Harry to stand next to him. Harry hesitated and then shrugged. It was already too late "he was heading down the rabbit whole one way or another. The platform lowered deep into the hill into what must have been a supernatural preparedness bunker. The walls gave off more of that strange blue glow illuminating strange gadgetry alongside boxes of bottled water and jarred food that seemed to move. Remus silently moved through the items amassed to the door of what looked like a shack in the middle of a glowing cave. Harry found it hard to keep up when things seemed to move out of the corners of his eyes. He shivered when a glass jar filled with blinking eyes followed his movement. The werewolf stiffly opened the door and took a deep breath. It was a room stocked from head to two with weapons sharpened and ready to deal massive trauma. It was a room filled with the prerequisites to medieval war. Either Remus was prepared for everything or he was planning on moonlighting as a vigilante in the near future; Harry was standing in the middle of a bunker that could easily be confused with the Bat cave, if Batman was a hunter and killer of evil. With a closet full of various battle ready swords. Some of the blades hanging from the wall looked wicked sharp; and the worn leather handles stained darker in some areas suggested some moderate uses. Amusedly, Harry wondered if an annoying fairy counterpart would show up soon; it seemed as if after having magic seriously confirmed it seemed to spring from the woodwork in an absurd number. Nodding in satisfaction with the sword that was over four feet long the taller man sheathed it in a scabbard connected to two straps and grabbed a dusty bag from the floor. Ears hanging on strings were grabbed off the walls along with dried herbs and stuffed in to the bag. Remus pulled open a drawer and leaned over it, exposing the lightly glowing neck band while muttering and pawing through its contents. Harry itched to ask him what the band meant. He wanted to know if it was a wizard thing and Harry should find his own appropriately glowing item to wear “ or if it was a werewolf thing. And had some religious connotation involving the moon. Give it a go. Harry was disappointed in the wand. He lit up the tip of his finger just for fun and was bemused to find it much brighter than the wand, like a light visible through clear water rather than murky with low battery power. The blade edge is silver. He removed the massive blade he had left on the table and angled it in the light. Harry pushed his glasses up higher on his nose and squinted at the edge of the blade. There was some sort of dullness in the metal at the edges. Remus quickly returned the blade to its home and Harry realized that he seemed to be keeping clear of the sharp edges, only handling them with handkerchief covered hand. He kept his mouth closed when Remus swung the scabbard over his shoulder like an errant child and turned back to the door, face filled with grim determination. Harry wondered at the damage it could cause if a werewolf was prepping to use it against its own kind. Remus caught him staring and said in all seriousness, "Sometimes even school teachers are forced to go to war, and I will fight for my freedom. Your review has been posted.

4: The Leaky Cauldron (@theleakycauldronnews) – Instagram photos and videos

www.enganchecubano.com get to the Leaky Cauldron go left about 20 metres and there is a door next to a red wizard go in there and your in the leaky cauldron.

Great Ace Something as simple and normal as an international Quidditch Camp can really turn your life upside-down; something that Harry Potter is about to find out, first-hand. New friends, skills, interests. Meanwhile, a war is brewing and sides must be chosen, and friendships will be tested. Fiction T - English - Harry P. He gripped his broom harder, determined to finish the Camp on a high. They were playing the Silver Dragons, so the match was going to be interesting no matter who won. They all flew a lap around the pitch before landing just off centre, on their side of the field. While this was happening, Tayla was talking. Once again, this team has an amazing record so far, identical in tally to that of their opponent! Featuring the youngest seeker in a century and the youngest chaser in half a century, the Fire Griffins are the youngest team in this competition! This is it, folks, the Grand Final have come down to youth versus experience! The draw in their statistics is from this particular match up as well! This is sure going to be interesting. Tayla sat back in her seat and folded her arms across her chest. The Silver Dragons had actually played together before, and knew each other a lot better than the Fire Griffins. In that respect, she was sure that they had the advantage. But the younger team had really pulled together over the last few weeks, and Potter was the most brilliant amateur seeker she had ever seen. It was really going to be an interesting game! she returned her focus to what the Referee was saying. All fouls will be pulled up and properly penalised; a free throw for the first, second and third attempt. A loss of ten points for all infringements after that, along with two penalty shots. A time out may only be called by the Captain. If the score is even at the four hour mark, a break of twenty minutes will be called before another thirty minutes is added into play. If the score is still even, we play sudden death. Captains, shake hands," the woman instructed, and two players stepped forward- one in red, the other silver. Their hands met briefly before falling down to their sides and they stepped back to take their position in line with their team. Now, she was announcing. She was back in her territory again. The Quaffle is released! Get ready for a brilliant match, everyone, as Owens immediately takes possession for the Silver Dragons. Reverse pass to Reynolds! He was young, but he never let nerves or embarrassment affect him while he was playing. Wow, this is incredibly quick passing, but! yes, Gibson with the Quaffle! Whatever it was, it worked. Their teamwork improved and suddenly the score was even on 70 all. Finally, the clock ticked over and she braced herself, knowing her throat was about to start hurting again. If the snitch is not spotted in the next ten minutes, the players will get a twenty minute break before they resume play for another half an hour! If the score is still even then, we move into sudden death! If they can hold it at that for the next ten minutes, the Silver Dragons win the match! With two minutes to go, Rachael Moore managed to slip in another goal and the score was even again. Fire Griffins in possession- No! Will she get there in time? A collective gasp went through the stadium as all eyes focused on the Referee. She made a great fuss over checking her watch and looking from Tayla to the ring. Tayla was going red from the pressure. Finally, after what felt like years to Tayla and the players- but was really only seconds, Hooch pointed her wand at her throat. The silence was unnatural. Hooch cleared her throat. She hated making decisions like this- one team always felt as though she was! well! she had been called a lot of creative names doing this job. She absent-mindedly wiped away a bead of sweat as she made her decision. Play will resume in twenty minutes. Apart from the fact that she wanted to see the Fire Griffins play some more, you had to allow a split second of time for announcing and the countdown had finished when the goal went in. Still, the Silver Dragons looked severely disappointed as they trudged back into their locker room. At the other end of the stadium, the Fire Griffins looked exhausted but hopeful. Tayla knew full well the tactical and psychological advantage the Fire Griffins had just received. The other team were about to doubt their plays, but the younger team had just been given a major advantage and they were going to grab it. Unless something happened, Tayla was putting her money on the younger team now. They have half an hour to try and win this game before we play sudden-death! They once again went through all of the proper pre-game rituals before the game began. Or is it just his usual feint? Robertson taking a risk, both seekers flat out in a race for the ground! Robertson not making the dive and smashing into the ground! Well fought, losing the match by a mere points in a total time of 4 hours, 17 minutes and 63 seconds! Harry had taken part in a lot of post-match Quidditch celebrations, but this one had to take the cake as the muggles would say. It had started off camp-wide with a presentation ceremony, a food fight and lots and lots of butterbeer and firewhisky for the adults. Different players from various teams had volunteered the victory songs that their local teams sung when they won matches and there was generally a lot of shouting and cheering. Even the Silver Dragons had joined in the celebrations, looking genuinely happy for the team that had beaten them- though Harry was sure it was just a mask from most of them. The fight dissolved soon after and they resigned themselves to a more quiet party when Professor Barone came in and told them to shut up. Of course, he had a long winded reason for it, his explanation almost putting them to sleep. Only Harry noticed the smirk on his face when they left. So, the Fire Griffins talked. Mostly about how they were going to miss each other and promises to keep in contact as well as what they planned on doing when they left camp. They were naturals, Lachlan had been pushed by his professional father since before he could walk and trained to be good. Suddenly, and Harry was not quite sure how it happened- Harry was back in London, Rachael beside him. He smiled slightly as she bowed her head, long hair swinging across her face making her look exceptionally cute. Harry fought to keep all evidence of his thoughts off his face. Rachael just smiled at him. Founded on some obscure date a long time ago, the inn is now owned and run by a rather old man by the name of Tom" he continued on, Rachael laughing at some of the things he said. Not many tour guides would be happy with the date he had given her! Finally, Harry finished his narration and pulled the girl into the inn and straight towards the barman. He put down the dishcloth and sighed. Rachael handed it to him, and Tom nodded his thanks before pointing them up the stairs. Snape, after all, had recognised him- though that might have had something to do with teaching him for the last four years and- apparently- going to school with his father. The two teenagers moved as quickly as they could through the hall, eager to get some sleep. Each landing had two rooms on it, and they started from room 1. The stairs were old and rickety- he felt as though with each step he took, he was more and more likely to fall straight through them. Finally, they reached their room and opened the door. Rachael went first, only to freeze in horror. There was not much to do, either. They had everything they needed, and more. Finally, Rachael offered her suggestion and Harry brightened considerably. While they were waiting for it, Harry heard a distinct voice. Luck was against him. Draco Malfoy had spotted Rachael. Malfoy nodded, and held out his hand. Both Harry and Rachael stiffened. Such a beautiful maiden must not be taken advantage of. A large, red handprint was visible on Malfoys cheek, and Harry had to bite his lip to stop himself from laughing. Malfoy was not impressed. That was the final for Harry.

5: The Leaky Cauldron (website) - Wikipedia

Leaky Cauldron Starbucks Logo Coffee Mug Cup (Heat Changing) 11oz Harry Potter Movie Gifts Merchandise Shirt Decal Poster Party Office Supplies by Trinkets and Novelty $ $ 19 95 + $ shipping.

It is accessible to the wizarding world, to which it is something of an economic hub, but hidden from Muggles non-magical people. However, Muggles are allowed access to it if they need to accompany their Muggle-born magical children. If a wizard or witch needs something, chances are that it can be found in Diagon Alley. The inn, which is invisible to Muggles, lies in between a bookshop and a music shop. To enter Diagon Alley, one must go through the Leaky Cauldron to a rear courtyard and tap a brick in the wall, found by counting three up and two across, three times. In the film, the tapping of five bricks around a hole in the wall opens the doorway to Diagon Alley. Given the busy nature of the area, travelling to and from Diagon Alley is likely typically done by more magical means such as Apparition or by using the Floo Network, which are both ways of wizarding transport. The name Diagon Alley is a near homophone of the word "diagonally", which is used as a plot device when Harry mispronounces the phrase near the beginning of the second book. Inside, it is dark and full of soft hooting, rustling, and the flickering of "jewel-bright eyes. Nearing the end of the summer holidays, Harry meets Ron and Hermione there. Rowling confirmed that Florean was murdered. In the back there is a corner devoted solely to divination, which includes a small table stacked with titles like Predicting the Unpredictable: Insulate Yourself against Shocks and Broken Balls: When Fortunes Turn Foul. Another small display contains the book Death Omens: To deal with the vicious books, set for the third year Care of Magical Creatures class by Hagrid, the harassed manager had to gear up with thick gloves and jab at them with a knobbly walking stick, as the books tended to rip each other apart. The manager says that he had thought he had seen the worst when they bought copies of The Invisible Book of Invisibility, which were promptly misplaced. The signing drew a huge crowd of fans mostly middle-aged women. Money in Harry Potter Gringotts Wizarding Bank is the only known bank of the wizarding world and it is operated primarily by goblins. A snowy white building, near the intersection of Knockturn Alley and Diagon Alley, Gringotts towers over all neighbouring shops. Customers pass through a set of bronze doors and then silver ones before entering the lobby. The main floor is paved with marble and has long counters stretching along its length. Within, wizards and witches keep their money and other valuables in vaults that are protected by very complex and very strong security measures. The vaults extend for miles under London and are accessible through rough stone passageways navigated by magic carts that travel speedily along their tracks. In addition, according to Hagrid, apart from Hogwarts, Gringotts is considered "the safest place in the world for anything you want to keep safe". Higher-security vaults may have various enchantments or other measures upon the doors. If anyone other than a certified Gringotts goblin touches the door, that person will be sucked into the vault, which is only checked for trapped thieves about once every 10 years. Dumbledore sent Hagrid to retrieve it while he escorted Harry. Griphook claims that the protection had been lessened due to the Vault being emptied. The trio escape with the Horcrux by freeing a half-blind dragon that was part of the security for the vault, and clambering onto its back. While Gringotts is largely staffed by goblins, including Griphook and Ragnok, it is known that the bank has human employees, though not apparently for banking and accounting services. Bill worked as a curse-breaker for Gringotts in Egypt, retrieving artefacts from ancient Egyptian tombs and pyramids. Knockturn Alley[ edit ] Knockturn Alley a play on the word "nocturnally" [33] is a dark and seedy alleyway leading off from the more savoury Diagon Alley to which Muggles have no access. It is frequently populated by Dark Wizards. Harry lands in Knockturn Alley in the Chamber of Secrets, when accidentally saying in the movie version "Diagonally" instead of Diagon Alley the book does not indicate what he pronounced while using Floo Powder to get to Diagon Alley. From there he takes him back to Diagon Alley, where they find Hermione Granger who takes them to the Weasleys. The shop sells many dangerous and Dark artefacts such as a cursed opal necklace, a Hand of Glory, and half of a vanishing cabinet set which was used by Draco Malfoy to infiltrate Hogwarts in the Half-Blood Prince. Lord Voldemort worked at Borgin and Burkes briefly after he left Hogwarts during the mids. It is owned by Caractacus Burke and Mr. Borgin is the only owner to appear in the series. It was founded by Daisy Dodderidge in "to serve as a gateway between the non-wizarding world and Diagon Alley. On the main floor, the inn has a bar, several private parlour rooms, and a large dining room. People often stay at The Leaky Cauldron when they come to London on shopping trips. The pub serves as a way of entering into Diagon Alley from the Muggle world for Muggle-borns and their parents both of whom, until the first letter from Hogwarts, have no magical knowledge or means of entering. The rear of The Leaky Cauldron opens onto a little courtyard, in which a particular brick must be tapped three times to open a path to Diagon Alley. It sells robes and other clothing, including the standard Hogwarts-required plain black work robes, and dress robes. Inside the shop, Madam Malkin and her assistants will tailor the robes to fit. Malkin is an archaic term for a crotchety old woman. Harry is rather bewildered by the questions Malfoy asks, because Harry is still unfamiliar with many aspects of the wizarding world. This meeting is far more unpleasant, and escalates quickly into a near-duel before Malfoy and his mother leave in disgust. Magical Menagerie[ edit ] The Magical Menagerie is a magical creature shop that in addition to selling magical creatures offers advice on animal care and health. The shop is very cramped, noisy and smelly, due to every inch being covered with cages. Among the creatures in the Magical Menagerie are enormous purple toads, a firecrab, poisonous orange snails, a fat white rabbit that can turn into a silk top hat, cats of every colour, ravens, puffskeins, and a cage of sleek black rats that play skipping games with their tails. When Harry, Ron, and Hermione visit the shop in Prisoner of Azkaban, a witch wearing heavy black spectacles helps them. Ollivanders[ edit ] The upper windows of Ollivanders Ollivanders is a wand shop described as "narrow and shabby, with a sign that reads Ollivanders: Makers of Fine Wands since BC in peeling gold letters over the door. The only display in the window overlooking Diagon Alley is a single wand lying on a faded purple cushion in the dusty window. Within, there are countless narrow boxes piled neatly right up to the ceiling and a spindly-legged chair" which Hagrid breaks when he sits upon it. Ollivander , the pale-eyed, white-haired shopkeeper, makes and sells magic wands to witches and wizards as they enter school or break their old wands. He remembers every wand he has ever sold. Harry rescues Ollivander in Deathly Hallows. The store windows often draw young customers to gaze longingly at the merchandise. Its most famous items on display are the Nimbus and the Firebolt broomsticks , both of which Harry would eventually own. The Firebolt is a national racing broom that professional leagues use. Harry spent the summer before his third year gazing at the brand new Firebolt racing broom in the display window, the price of which was only available upon request. Ron had previously longed for a full set of Chudley Cannons robes offered at the shop. The shop is quite fascinating despite its very bad smell a mixture of bad eggs and rotten cabbage. Some of the ingredients available are silver unicorn horns for twenty-one Galleons each , glittery-black beetle eyes five Knuts a scoop , and Dragon liver seventeen Sickles an ounce. Stalls[ edit ] As well as many shops, Diagon Alley also contains small stalls, which sell a wide variety of magical objects, sweets, and trinkets. They set up stalls selling amulets and other objects, which supposedly protect you against werewolves, Dementors and Inferi. These "dark magic protection" stalls, however, are illegal, and likely scams. Arthur Weasley is the one in charge of arresting their owners. The front of the shop is described as a fireworks display against the muffled backdrop of dull shops. The front of the shop has a sign advertising U-No-Poo: Why are you worrying about You-Know-Who? After an early departure from Hogwarts in Order of the Phoenix, the two Weasleys set up their shop in Diagon Alley, which quickly became a huge success. In interviews post-publication of Deathly Hallows, Rowling has said that George after Fred died reopened the Diagon Alley store, that "it became a tremendous money-spinner,"and that Ron worked for him there after taking Auror training and going to work for the Ministry of Magic.

6: Leaky Cauldron | Harry Potter Wiki | FANDOM powered by Wikia

The Leaky Cauldron, also called Leaky, TLC, or Leaky News, is a Harry Potter fansite and blog. The site features news, image and video galleries, downloadable widgets, a chat room and discussion forum, and an essay project called Scribbulus, among other offerings.

It was the entrance to Diagon Alley and indirectly Knockturn Alley. The rear of the pub opened up onto a chilly courtyard that contains the entrance to both alley ways. To Muggles, the pub appears to be a broken-down old shop front on Charing Cross Road. This, however, was not the case prior to the imposition of the Statute of Secrecy and, in fact, prior to this, Muggle visitors were neither turned away, nor made to feel unwelcome. All of these people are Muggles, and all of them are wrong. Created some two centuries before the imposition of the International Statute of Secrecy, the Leaky Cauldron was initially visible to Muggle eyes. It is the ideal spot to catch up with wizarding gossip if you happen to live a long way from the nearest magical neighbour. Tom, the innkeeper, greeted Hagrid there like an old friend. This made it seem that Hagrid was something of a regular. Harry mispronounced "Diagonally", and therefore travelled to Knockturn Alley instead. He also met Cornelius Fudge in a private room for the first time. With Lord Voldemort and the Death Eaters moving in the open, many witches and wizards avoided public places as much as possible, including the Leaky Cauldron. When Harry Potter, Rubeus Hagrid, and the Weasley family passed through the Leaky Cauldron that summer on his way to Diagon Alley, they noticed that the bar was empty with the exception of Tom. While passing through the Leaky Cauldron on the way to the bank, they noted that it was nearly empty. Tom bowed in fear at the sight of Hermione, who was disguised as Bellatrix Lestrange at the time. Hannah Abbott then became the new landlady. A few old women were sitting in a corner, drinking tiny glasses of sherry. One of them was smoking a long pipe. A little man in a top hat was talking to the old barman, who was quite bald and looked like a gummy walnut" â€”The Leaky Cauldron in [src] the interior of the pub Located at 1 Diagon Alley, [1] The Leaky Cauldron was nested between a Muggle bookshop and a record store. Inside the pub, it was dark and shabby, with a bar and a number of tables in the shadows of the corners. In stark contrast to the grubby downstairs of the pub, there were some unexpectedly pleasant rooms upstairs where passing wizards and witches could stay for the night. Beneath the stairs leading to the second floor, was a second set of stairs leading to the basement. The latter come out on the right wall where two sitting areas containing red couch and chairs were nestled in each corner on this side. The front wall had a stage with red curtains in front of a lowered viewing area. The back wall was blank, but the left wall had another red sitting area, and a bar. However, the basement, it seems, had been locked off for no apparent reason. Please help the Harry Potter Wiki by expanding this article to give more complete coverage of its subject. Bedroom in the Leaky Cauldron Private parlour was a room located behind the bar at the ground-floor. It had a desk, a window and a little table and two somewhat uncomfortable chairs. In , the day maid was about to clean the room when its owner roared at her and closed the door.

7: Leaky Cauldron – The Harry Potter Lexicon

Harry and [Y/N] emerged from Flourish and Blotts ten minutes later with their new books under their arms and made their way back to the Leaky Cauldron, Harry hardly noticing where he was going and bumping into several people, [Y/N] apologising on behalf of her twin.

Tom , the innkeeper greeted Hagrid there like an old friend. This made it seem that Hagrid was something of a regular. Some other witches and wizards who were there at the time were Doris Crockford , Dedalus Diggle , and Quirinus Quirrell and they took a great interest in Harry, queuing to shake his hand. Harry Potter mispronounced "Diagonally" and therefore travelled to Knockturn Alley instead. After doing their shopping Harry and the Weasleys departed through the Leaky Cauldrons fireplace to the Burrow. He also met Cornelius Fudge in a private room for the first time. With Lord Voldemort and the Death Eaters moving in the open, many witches and wizards avoided public places as much as possible, including the Leaky Cauldron. When Harry Potter , Rubeus Hagrid , and the Weasley family passed through the Leaky Cauldron that summer on his way to Diagon Alley , they noticed that the bar was empty with the exception of Tom. While passing through the Leaky Cauldron on the way to the bank, they noted that it was nearly empty. Tom bowed in fear at the sight of Hermione, who was disguised as Bellatrix Lestrange at the time. After At some point after the end of the Second Wizarding War , Tom either retired or passed away. Hannah Abbott then became the new landlady. Structure Edit "For a famous place, it was very dark and shabby. A few old women were sitting in a corner, drinking tiny glasses of sherry. One of them was smoking a long pipe. A little man in a top hat was talking to the old barman, who was quite bald and looked like a gummy walnut" –"The Leaky Cauldron in [src] The Leaky Cauldron was nested between a Muggle bookshop and a record store. Inside the pub, it was dark and shabby, with a bar and a number of tables in the shadows of the corners. In stark contrast to the grubby downstairs of the pub, there were some unexpectedly pleasant rooms upstairs where passing wizards and witches could stay for the night. The latter come out on the right wall where two sitting areas containing red couch and chairs were nestled in each corner on this side. The front wall had a stage with red curtains in front of a lowered viewing area. The back wall was blank, but the left wall had another red sitting area, and a bar. However, the basement, it seems, had been locked off for no apparent reason. Known rooms This article or section is a stub. You can help by expanding it. Private parlour Edit This was a room located behind the bar at the ground-floor. It had a desk, a window and a little table and two somewhat uncomfortable chairs. In , the day maid was about to clean the room when its owner roared at her and closed the door.

8: The Leaky Cauldron History | Harry Potter Amino

The Leaky Cauldron has changed little over the years; it is small, dingy and welcoming, with a few bedrooms above the public bar for travellers who live a long way from London. It is the ideal spot to catch up with wizarding gossip if you happen to live a long way from the nearest magical neighbour.

See the history and the creation and other things about the Leaky Cauldron. Have a good reading! The Leaky Cauldron is a popular wizarding pub in London. It is the entrance to Diagon Alley, and, indirectly Knockturn Alley. For much of the end of the 20th century, Tom was the landlord. At some point, Hannah Abbott became the landlady, moving in with her husband, Neville Longbottom. It was built by Daisy Dodderidge, the first landlady, in She said that it was, "to serve as a gateway between the non-wizarding world and Diagon Alley. To Muggles, the pub appears to be a broken-down old shop front on Charing Cross Road. This, however, was not the case prior to the imposition of the Statute of Secrecy and, in fact, prior to this, Muggle visitors were neither turned away, nor made to feel unwelcome. The rear of the pub, however, opens up onto a chilly courtyard and the entrance to Diagon Alley. To gain access, a witch or wizard has to tap the bricks in the wall in an anti-clockwise order, causing a doorway to Diagon Alley to form and then rearrange itself back into the original wall after the person's walk through. History's The Leaky Cauldron was built in the early sixteenth century by Daisy Dodderidge; its true address is number one, Diagon Alley. Prior to the imposition of the Statute of Secrecy, the pub was accessible to Muggles, who were made to feel welcome at the pub, but some of whom left before finishing their mead nonetheless because of the absurdity of the conversations around them. Though insistent on numerous concealment spells and good behaviour from all who used the pub, Gamp was sympathetic to the need of wizards to let off steam during this difficult time, and further agreed to give the landlord permission to let people into Diagon Alley from his backyard, because the shops behind the Leaky Cauldron were now also in need of protection. The Minister at that time, Faris Spavin, was certain that this was the end of the pub, and that it could not be saved. By the time he finished his seven-hour speech declaring this, however, he received a note from his secretary revealing that wizards had rallied, and through the mass use of Memory Charms had altered the entire route of the new road, leaving the architects confused as to why there was a blank space on the design, and why said space did not appear to the naked eye. Tom, the innkeeper, greeted Hagrid there like an old friend. This made it seem that Hagrid was something of a regular. Some other witches and wizards who were there at the time were Doris Crockford, Dedalus Diggle, and Quirinus Quirrell and they took a great interest in Harry, queuing to shake his hand. Harry mispronounced "Diagonally", and therefore travelled to Knockturn Alley instead. He also met Cornelius Fudge in a private room for the first time. With Lord Voldemort and the Death Eaters moving in the open, many witches and wizards avoided public places as much as possible, including the Leaky Cauldron. When Harry Potter, Rubeus Hagrid, and the Weasley family passed through the Leaky Cauldron that summer on his way to Diagon Alley, they noticed that the bar was empty with the exception of Tom. While passing through the Leaky Cauldron on the way to the bank, they noted that it was nearly empty. Tom bowed in fear at the sight of Hermione, who was disguised as Bellatrix Lestrange at the time. After At some point after the end of the Second Wizarding War, Tom either retired or passed away. Hannah Abbott then became the new landlady. Structure "For a famous place, it was very dark and shabby. A few old women were sitting in a corner, drinking tiny glasses of sherry. One of them was smoking a long pipe. A little man in a top hat was talking to the old barman, who was quite bald and looked like a gummy walnut" â€”The Leaky Cauldron in Located at 1 Diagon Alley, The Leaky Cauldron was nested between a Muggle bookshop and a record store. Inside the pub, it was dark and shabby, with a bar and a number of tables in the shadows of the corners. In stark contrast to the grubby downstairs of the pub, there were some unexpectedly pleasant rooms upstairs where passing wizards and witches could stay for the night. Beneath the stairs leading to the second floor, was a second set of stairs leading to the basement. The latter come out on the right wall where two sitting areas containing red couch and chairs were nestled in each corner on this side. The front wall had a stage with red curtains in front of a lowered viewing area. The back wall was blank, but the left wall had another red sitting area, and a bar. However, the basement, it seems, had been locked off for no apparent reason. Known rooms This article or section is a stub. You can help by expanding it. Private parlour This was a room located behind the bar at the ground-floor. It had a desk, a window and a little table and two somewhat uncomfortable chairs. Room 10 This was a room at the first-floor. In , the day maid was about to clean the room when its owner roared at her and closed the door. Room 11 This was a room at the first-floor which had a bed in the middle, a fireplace, a talking mirror, and a window. Dishes Dishes served at the Leaky Cauldron included: In the film adaptation of Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban, a different doorway, with a different sign is shown. It is never shown whether this is supposed to be an alternate doorway or a "new" main entrance. Also, Tom the landlord was recast for the third film. In real life, there is no building in between 48 Charing Cross Road and 12 Great Newport Street, which can be seen in the following image, but possibly because in the real world it is "concealed". It is possible that as they were all three different door-ways, that the Leaky Cauldron had a door-way for every single part of London. Years , the Leaky Cauldron has a basement, notice board, cinema room, and a back door. I hope you liked and thanks for read!

9: Leaky Cauldron | The Harry Potter Compendium | FANDOM powered by Wikia

At the Leaky Cauldron they meet Mr. Weasley. He mentions that Sirius Black is still at large, and the Ministry is putting all its efforts into capturing him. The other Weasleys sweep in: Mrs. Weasley, Percy, who is now Hogwarts Head Boy and even more pompous than the previous year, if that is possible, the Twins, Fred and George, who try to.

4-THE LEAKY CAULDRON pdf

A guide to cognitive fitness harvard Dancing the Dark Ballet Theres a decorator in your doll house Computer Security in Financial Organisations Biology chapter 12 assessment answers Pig giggles and rabbit rhymes The oxford handbook of sociolinguistics Community bushfire safety A Good Sense Guide to Happiness in Your Business and Personal Life Classic stories from the lives of our prophets. Pavilion of frozen women Mandatory minimum sentences should be repealed pt. I: USA Today; pt. II: Ron Walters Ilford multigrade papers a manual for the darkroom Editors on editing gerald gross The Prisoner Episode Guide The History Of The Military Occupation Of The Territory Of New Mexico From 1846-1851, By The Government O A Darker Shade of Crimson Sex, the slump, and salvation Maine Off the Beaten Path, 6th (Off the Beaten Path Series) Smudge pits and hide smoking revisited James M. Skibo, John G. Franzen, and Eric C. Drake The lures of the therapeutic perspective Diet plan for high uric acid Case study in change management C.S. Lewis by Harry Blamires Psychoanalytic process research strategies Glimpses into the tribal life of Andhra Pradesh Mutual Funds, in Crisis? Mastering Elliot wave Thoughts on parliamentary reform Philip K. Thayils law relating to companies directors Shelfish arent fish Markets, state and social opportunity The story of o 2 Circular to officers in charge of depots of supplies Victims or villains Good news for modern man A treatise on the practice and procedure of the United States Supreme Court Measuring the indirect employment effects of multinational enterprises Information highways, or the difficulty of transforming a utopia into a technological program The City, entrepreneurship, and insurance Clive Trebilcock