Since the first caveman grunted at his wife once to say he was hungry, and twice to say he was lonely, communication has influenced real world actions. When a society shifts how it is communicating then the flow of real world actions also changes. Influence, a topic I am always talking about, can be about changing minds, but it becomes particularly powerful when it turns into action. People are habitual and if left alone and observed, they can become fairly predictable. Changing habits then becomes very powerful. What makes social media so powerful? In general, the more contact time someone or something has with another object on this earth, the more it will influence it. The old saying that you become who you hang around rings true. Social media has changed the way we communicate. It is almost like a cross between TV Our old way of getting new information on a daily basis , Social Interaction other sources of influence and information , and the Telephone Which allowed us to share and receive information. This digital lovechild of social communication continues to creep into our lives and the more time we spend on it the greater the influence it has on us. The formula is fairly quantifiable. You take the number of users on a platform available for social interaction and communication and you also look at the average user time on platform UTOP and you can get an idea of the influence of that platform. This can be taken to a personal level by looking at the number of friends or connections a user has on each platform they use, and then the time they spend on each platform. These two numbers will tell you which platform is likely to influence them the most. This highlights the problem in marketing of shorter attention spans and the desire to have more contact time with people you are trying to influence. This is about the crossover between the real world to the digital world and then the journey back to the real world. With social media, real people enter the digital world communicate, and then those digital actions crossover into the real world through actions and changed relationships. As the infographic below from my friends at Dashburst show, the number on a platform, the time people spend, and the translation back over the digital divide into real world changes are what is making social media one of the most powerful tools in the world. Hey if you want another one of the most powerful tools in the world to work for you hey did I just call myself a tool?

Every second two new members join LinkedIn LinkedIn, the social network for professionals, continues to grow every second. From groups to blogs to job listings, this platform is a rich source of information and conversation for professionals who want to connect to others in their industry. LinkedIn is definitely worth paying attention to. In particular, this is a place where you may want to focus more on new users. Making your group or community a great source of information and a newbie-friendly space can help you to make the most out of the growing userbase. Make sure you share consistently to your LinkedIn company page and profile by, for example, scheduling your posts. Social Media has overtaken porn as the No. So next time you find yourself watching Kitten vs. Watermelon videos on Facebook, you can at least console yourself with the fact that the majority of people online right now are doing something similar. Social media carries more weight than ever. It continues to grow as a habit, and new platforms continue to appear and develop. Putting time and effort into your social media strategy clearly makes sense in light of these stats. Looking at the latest Twitter statistics and Facebook statistics , these platforms might be a better place for your contest or survey, while passive content like blog posts or slide decks might be just right for your LinkedIn audience. That means there are lots of people out there getting involved and managing a social media strategy. Plus, there are lots of blogs, videos and slide decks around to help you out. Be sure to find the right social media management tool for you to stay on top of everything. While you can reach people almost anytime, since they have their smartphones with them almost always, this also means you can interrupt pretty much any part of their lives. This is great, because blogging for your business has lots of advantages: What a lot of people struggle here is how to write the best headlines for your articles , when the best time is to publish posts and lots of other blogging questions that arise when people are starting out. The other common problem people have is which blogging platform to choose and where to host it. If you decide to go with self hosted solution like WordPress one of the most popular choices today , you can check this list of top 10 web hosting companies. The list is constantly updated with new hosters and there are very convenient options to quickly find fastest web hosting sites that will serve any website needs. Of course, not all marketers work at marketing companies, but the stats are still interestingâ€”how many companies in any industry can afford to hireâ€”or already haveâ€”a full-time blogger? Facebook itself has been in the news several times over privacy issues, Instagram users recently got in a kerfuffle over changing their terms of service, and the recent NSA news has seen people become more conscious of their privacy online. Assuming that all of your customers are thinking along the same lines could be a big mistake. Remember that your customers might have very different priorities than what you expect. Hopefully these stats will help you to identify trends that will affect your strategy and adjust accordingly. For more social media studies take a look at this post. 3: 4 reasons why many people don't vote | Science News for Students

There are now billion people on the planet and of those the following numbers make interesting reading. There are just over 3 billion active Internet users (45% of the world's internet users) Nearly billion people have social media accounts.

Have we reached Peak Anti-Semitism in the Guardian yet? Hilary Freeman writes a column on teaching her three-year-old about anti-semitism - in case Corbyn ever gets elected <https://www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2015/oct/26/anti-semitism-teaching>: And yet, in the current climate, with accusations of antisemitism in the Labour party making headline news virtually every day, and a rise in antisemitism all over Europe, this is an issue that is pertinent to her life and to her future, not just a story in a book. Many Jews in the UK are feeling very unsettled. How could they possibly take it any further into cartoonish lunacy than this? I hate mocking the fear of antisemitism, which is a real thing that does happen and should be condemned unequivocally. Even more, though, I hate the British media for making it both extremely easy and one hundred percent necessary to mock them for it. Why are you a Nazi? I am not a Nazi. That they should be loaded onto a train and burnt to ashes? We are not the enemy of the people! Yes you fucking are. I want media workers to be free to do their best work, not held back by billionaire owners, tech giants or the state. ChangeTheMedia â€” jeremycorbyn The mass media absolutely are the enemy of the people. Without question they are. They are the enemy of our entire species. This has never been done before. Only twelve years ago technology reached the point where this could be done. Since then it has made it ever so much easier to do. The reason we have not turned our creative power toward health and harmony instead of death and destruction is because we are being manipulated by powerful people who have a vested interest in maintaining the status quo. And they are doing so using the mass media. One gets paid handfuls of cash to do shameful and degrading things which tear apart the fabric of society, the other makes an honest living as a sex worker. Literally nobody wants that for humanity besides those billionaires and their immediate underlings. Keep consenting to increasing degrees of corrupt crony capitalism. Keep voting for the same oligarch-owned two-headed one-party system day in and day out. Keep ignoring how the US military is the worst polluter on earth and how the cost of the Iraq war could have purchased the planetary conversion to renewable energy. The only thing keeping us from rising like lions in unvanquishable number as in the Percy Bysshe Shelley poem and creating a healthy world is because we are imprisoned in a psychic cage made of propaganda narratives. The billionaire-controlled mass media are the enemy of the people in the same way a cage is the enemy of a bird. We have native parrots here in Australia. They are our enemy. But we are the many. And they are the few. And we are waking up. A Field Guide for Utopia Preppers.

5: Trump Tells Reporters: 'You People' Don't Cover Great Economy

The newer, digital media are sometimes referred to as social media. The singular form of this term is medium. network A group of interconnected people or things.

He had to know that he and I would never vote the same way. But he met my eyes along with those of every other student in that class. His voice quavered as he implored us “for the sake of our country” to vote. Voter turnout in the United States is incredibly low compared to similar countries, notes Donald Green. Most are fairly interested in politics, notes Mert Moral. They talk about politics. They are interested in political topics at the local level. Scientists have been looking into this. Below are four reasons they offer to explain why many people do not show up at the polls. If you are a citizen, you are signed up to vote. Not so in the United States. It is up to each person there to sign up, notes Barry Burden. To register, someone must go to an official site, such as a library or a government office, then fill out paperwork. A Pew Research Center study reported that 51 million citizens “nearly one-in-four eligible to vote” had not registered. Easier registration could mean more voting. By contrast, making it easier for people to vote by letting them vote before Election Day known as early voting, actually lowered the voting rate. The researchers published their findings in the American Journal of Political Science. College graduates make more money, on average. They are more likely to look for information about politics. And they are more likely to have friends who vote. People without a college degree, he says, are less likely to seek out political information. They also are less likely to have friends who care about politics or talk about voting. Other political parties exist, such as the Green party and the Libertarians. This is because U. They vote for parties to sit in a Parliament. The party that dominates the Parliament gets to pick the Prime Minister. But even a non-dominant party can get one or more members in Parliament “if that party gets enough votes. No one else from their party would automatically get a seat in Congress either. Americans vote for candidates for particular, individual seats. Voting can mean standing in long lines on Election Day. So a candidate from a third party would have to win the majority of votes from their particular area to get the seat in Congress. Such minor-party candidates seldom raise much money to campaign. Meanwhile, the two big political parties tend to raise lots of money to help their candidates. This promotes a system where candidates tend to be members of only the major political parties. And in a two-party system, voters might not find that either candidate represents their views. Voting “and then telling others that you did, or publicly stating that you plan to” is a way to show loyalty to your social group and its values, he says. And where that happened, it usually was only in very small, local elections. Not only that, where elections occur often, people may experience voter burnout. If people are asked to vote too often, or choose a position on too many subjects, they might just opt out of the whole process. There are many other reasons people might not vote “from anger at the government to concern that being a registered voter will make the government more likely to call them up for jury duty. What could change their minds? Read Part 2 to learn about four ways backed by science that can drive more people to the polls. Congress is made of two parts: Today, developed countries also tend to be among the more technologically advanced nations. High-school graduates may apply to colleges for further, advanced education. Some journals publish papers from all fields of science, technology, engineering and math, while others are specific to a single subject. The best journals are peer-reviewed: They send out all submitted articles to outside experts to be read and critiqued. The goal, here, is to prevent the publication of mistakes, fraud or sloppy work. It encompasses not only the traditional media “newspapers, magazines, radio and television” but also Internet- and smartphone-based outlets, such as blogs, Twitter, Facebook and more. The newer, digital media are sometimes referred to as social media. The singular form of this term is medium. Relating to gatherings of people; a term for animals or people that prefer to exist in groups. To ask questions that glean data on the opinions, practices such as dining or sleeping habits, knowledge or skills of a broad range of people. Researchers select the number and types of people questioned in hopes that the answers these individuals give will be representative of others who are their age, belong to the same ethnic group or live in the same region. 6: Search People On Social Media

"When you look at all the different ways in which we use communication tools, and social media is pretty different, very truncated. People use emojis, they use short form, sometimes it's difficult to know what something means."

September 16, at 9: It is not necessarily always the media who I think are at fault for not reporting the facts, though. It makes for smarter Americans as a whole. Long gone are the days where we all tuned in for the evening news. I understand the public sentiment however. Politicians that prefer to hide the truth often demonize the mainstream media. Also, some highly biased newspapers and one highly biased channel produce reports that are degrees in the opposite direction of the mainstream. This can lead to confusion and general skepticism of the entire industry. One of our premier humanitarians, Jimmy Carter, makes a statement that is obviously true. Any look at the signs they carry, or a listen to what they say, proves that many at the "tea parties" are blatant racists. Yet CNN closes the segment with a quote from Mark Williams, tea party organizer, claiming that Carter is making a stupid statement. The placement of the Williams quote at the end of the piece indicates that is the sentiment CNN wants to leave with the viewers. Yet all bought and paid for. It seems that the news is reported according to the biased opinion of the reporter. It would be refreshing if we could just hear the news as it happens, and then form our own opinions. A common marxist in the white house, who was created by the media is proof enough for me. I enjoy your network, but why am I watching FOX news for this coverage? I despise that channel. The information that the media gives is so one sided and slanted to the views of a certain group. Your job is to just report not give your opinion. We hear a story one day, then something entirely different the following day. News used to be unbiased AND a fiscal loss leader so boring or not the news was presented. Since news became a profit maker the "legitimate news" reminds me more of the "rags" sold at the checkout counter. For example, you all spent weeks covering "death panels" because the hater-quitter someone know for her grasp of current affairs "NOT" said it. Hell the Republicans have favored end-of-life education for years, that is until it was put forward by the cowardly Democrats. You constantly cover the right wing crazies birthers, Obama haters rather than the boring every-man who has legitimate gripes. I know this is not going to get shown but I have to voice my feelings. When it comes to politics it is very evident that you can get contradicting stories coming from the media depending on which channel you are watching. For example it is obvious any story featuring President Barack Obama that you would find on FOX "news" is politically driven and it is hard for me to believe a word of anything that comes out of their mouths. Distrust of the media grows as people become more sophisticated. They know that owners of large media outlets have their own agendas. They also know that sensationalism sells, hence the focus on protests, brawls, bad behavior in general. That sells more people to watching and when more watch then advertisers pay more for the time slot and the media has bigger profits. Bad news makes more profits. Gone are the days that the majority of news outlets are truly looking out for the people and providing them news. Most reports are commentary and personal opinion. Big stories get ignored based on political persuasion. I no longer trust anyone. What happened to honor and integrity? The details one network decides to cover can create an entirely different impression than another network. Once you mix in the obvious entertainment aspects and revenue needs of a station it allows a lot of room for error. The only way to combat this is to branch out and consume information from a variety of sources and not focus on only one network or medium. These range from over coverage of what should be entertainment news, everything from Britney Spears, Micheal Jackson and countless other stories that should be on entertainment tonight. Please start cover the real issues and problems that we face as a country. Ron September 16, at 9: CNN has always been my trusted news source. However, I must say that you guys over-analyze when it comes to the Wolfe Blitzer segments. More facts, less hype. Joe September 16, at 9: This divide always seems based on ideology and politics. This distrust of the media is possibly heavily correlated to that divide and results in what the public deem as reliable and accurate. The public is quickly growing tired of the Spin and agenda of the media. Just report the news, facts and BOTH sides of a debate. Many outlets are skipping over a story that may include corruption, politics and waste of tax payer money. Leave it to the people to decide after being given the truth of the reports. Where are the reports of Acorn and the frauds and cheats that is going on in that organization? That is OUR tax-payer money!! It is sad that people are so scared to investigate or speak out to protect us Americans, because they are on one side of the political line. Soon this country will be no better than any other country. Maybe we would get somewhere on this whole health care system issue if we stop the partisan nonsense. Do what is right!!! Most stories are presented in a manner that is favorable to the political view of the news organization. It is very obvious to a middle of the road person. Worst of all is the denials by the news people. There is such a bias that is carefully edited across the political spectrum with several major media outlets that some stories lack critical detail. I have to go back and forth on different news websites and TV channels in order to piecemeal together the full story of any important news topic. What we experienced was not portrayed in the media. We now question all news stories reported on the news. We have recently chosen topics of interest and viewed how other news outlets report the same topic. Some do not cover the story while others insert an obvious slant to the facts. The media seems to be making policy rather than reporting. Now, everyone seems to have an agenda and to hell with the facts. Very few news organizations do their homework and clearly have political agendas. There are a couple of exceptions. This is a major story but few are bringing it to the attention of the taxpayer. They try to take the most innocent event and turn it into a huge sensational controversy. No personal opinion, conjecture, or political propaganda should be considered news. I am self-employed and stay in tune with current events. I view the News media as being very one-sided. CNN especially has changed from not conducting real journalism during the Bush years out of fear to lambasting President Obama at every opportunity. What happened to responsible and true journalism? CNN is instead responsible for partially fueling the flames of racism in politics just for higher ratings. This is a dangerous precedent and does not serve the population. Having said that, I have noticed an extremely biased trend in favorable coverage to the current President. Although this trend is more so on your competitors such as MSNBC, CNN has unfortunately neglected to correspond on important issues that although may politically harm the current administration, are none the less important. I may not agree with his political stances at all times, but at least I can count on his honesty and he admits when he is wrong. Thank you for giving us the opportunity to voice our opinions. Perhaps this is the necessary beginning step to unbiased news correspondence in the media in the future. Juan Hernandez September 16, at 9: They all have a jaded slant that helps promote that agenda. Yep, the future news director is finishing up his last beer as I type, headed off to his next class, Creative Writing Kevin September 16, at 9: I always search online to get the full scoop. Truth seems to mean next to nothing when compared to the desire for ratings. Every item is presented as earth shattering, even when it is mundane. You need to do your own research. I watched the town hall meeting "live" with Arlen Specter. All day they showed the clip when a man stood up and yelled at him. Later that night on a different channel I watched the clip again BUT it was edited.
