Discussion. The results of this study answer important questions about whether community coalitions formerly funded through large federal grants continue to exist after the initial federal funding, and if there are identifiable differences in the characteristics of coalitions that are sustained compared to those that are not sustained.

A number of homework problems have been included that are designed to enhance critical thinking skills. Critical thinking is the process we use to reflect on, access and judge the assumptions underlying our own and others ideas and actions. Socratic questioning is at the heart of critical thinking and a number of homework problems draw from R. Why do you say that? How does this relate to our discussion? Questions that probe assumptions: What could we assume instead? How can you verify or disapprove that assumption? Questions that probe reasons and evidence: What would be an example? What do you think causes to happen? Questions about Viewpoints and Perspectives: What would be an alternative? What is another way to look at it? Would you explain why it is necessary or beneficial, and who benefits? Why is the best? What are the strengths and weaknesses of? What is a counterargument for? Questions that probe implications and consequences: What generalizations can you make? What are the consequences of that assumption? What are you implying? Questions about the question: What was the point of this question? Why do you think I asked this question?
