

1: Inspiring Stories

The story of African American doctors since John Henry Jordan's days has been one of both incredible achievement and deep-seated discrimination. It's also the story of my family. John Henry.

ABIM would like to take a moment and honor the many contributions that Black physicians continue to make to the medical community. Please join us by learning more about a few of their life-saving achievements throughout U. James Derham was the first black person to receive a certificate to practice medicine in the US. He won his freedom and set up his own practice in New Orleans. James Derham was born into slavery and owned by a physician in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. In he was sold to a prominent surgeon in New Orleans, Louisiana. Derham later opened his own practice in New Orleans without ever formally receiving a medical degree. Rebecca Lee Crumpler became the first black woman doctor in the U. She graduated from, what is now, Boston University School of Medicine. Later in life I devoted my time, when best I could, to nursing as a business, serving under different doctors for a period of eight years from to From these doctors I received letters commending me to the faculty of the New England Female Medical College, whence, four years afterward, I received the degree of doctress of medicine. Her book is one of the very first medical publications by an African American. Charles Drew pioneered techniques for separating and preserving blood components-especially blood plasma. His expertise saved thousands of lives during World War II. Drew went on to revolutionize ways to process and store blood plasma in order to save thousands of soldiers during World War II. After creating two of the first blood banks, Drew returned to Howard University in Morehouse School of Medicine is founded by Dr. He later moved back to Atlanta and founded the medical education program at Morehouse College, a prestigious historically black college. The Morehouse School of Medicine became independent from Morehouse College in , with Sullivan as president and dean. He continued as president through , when he took a leave of absence after being appointed to serve as Secretary of Health and Human Services HHS. He battled the tobacco industry and championed victims of AIDS. Mae Jemison became the first black female astronaut to complete a space mission. Mae Jemison has a background in both engineering and medical research. She has worked in the areas of computer programming, nuclear magnetic resonance spectroscopy, reproductive biology, and more. In the s, Dr. Her task of managing the health care delivery system for U. Peace Corps and U. Embassy personnel included provision of medical care, supervision of the pharmacy and laboratory, medical administrative issues, and supervision of medical staff. Jemison developed and participated in research projects on the Hepatitis B vaccine, schistosomiasis and rabies in conjunction with the National Institute of Health and the Center for Disease Control. On return to the U. Jemison was working as a General Practitioner and attending graduate engineering classes in Los Angeles when selected to the astronaut program. Jemison was a co-investigator on the bone cell research experiment flown on the mission. In completing her first space flight, she logged hours, 30 minutes and 23 seconds in space.
