By putting the two artists side-by-side, very often with the same subject matter, the viewer gets an unusually clear understanding of the two artists, and what makes each one distinct. This is the type of exhibit that really deepens one's art appreciation. Lee Mac - 3 days ago We really like going to the museum and seeing all the artwork. They had several nice gift shops scattered throughout with the normal museum type of items. Lots of Christmas items when we were there. John Maulin - 10 days ago This is a beautiful stop for anyone interested in art and history! A staple at Trafalgar Square, it is easy to get to along the tube line or by foot near other tourist attractions, near cafes, pubs, and restaurants, and with a cafe of its own in the building. We went on a Friday evening, and there was a drawing night event with lots of people walking around the paintings and drawing them with giant sketch pads, which is a great and interactive idea! We also began a scavenger hunt from here that took us all around London on a wild adventure! The staff at the National Gallery were aware of the hunt and played their parts wonderfully! I highly recommend this stop in London, especially as it is free to enter the main areas! James Stewart - 15 days ago Beautiful. The art will blow you away and the galleries rotate and change year round. A finer collection would be hard to find and is offered free for admittance. All the great masters must have been represented here at some point in time. Came in May and then again in August and it was like coming to a whole new gallery since so many of the exhibits had changed. Dat Nguyen - 22 days ago Honestly, after my visit it has become my best favorite art museum in the world. The collection is very well ensemble, many iconic and well known pieces. It is not overcrowded in pieces as other museums. It was a very memorable experience for me, specially because I could see many pieces explained by sister Wendy Beckett at her program. It is very remarkable and plausible, the fact that in English museums people can make a free visit and join a free guided tour, to hear a formal explanation from people more familiar with the pieces. I am fan of your youtube channel.
