This article will discuss how to write an APA-styled paper, tackling essay components like the title page, abstract, and body. A running head is an abbreviated title of no more than 50 characters, starting with the words "Running head," followed by a colon, one space, and an abbreviated title—all in capital letters. Header All pages in an APA paper should include a header. In the header, include the running head title, followed by the page number, which should be right-justified. When page numbering is properly set up using the Headers and Footers function in Microsoft Word, the computer will automatically handle the consecutive numbering. Abstract The Abstract, typically a crucial component of an APA paper, should summarize the topic and must accurately state the rationale and fundamental nature of the paper by including the main ideas and major points. We advise students to mention only the most important findings or implications. The word count limit of an abstract varies from journal to journal, and can range from to words. The Abstract should follow the title page, on a separate page titled with the centered word "Abstract. Each of these sections should naturally follow the other, which means they do not necessarily begin on a new page. Each section requires a title centered on the page. And remember, you must follow APA reference guidelines to ensure all of your citations are accurate and properly formatted. Because its position in the paper makes it easily identifiable, the Introduction does not require a heading. Instead, include the title of the paper at the top of the page, in upper and lower case, followed by the text. Our editors typically look for the following items in an APA Introduction: Try to avoid jargon as it will only confuse your reader. Method This section describes the research and how it was conducted. The method is very important because it concerns the reproducibility of the research. Reproducibility, one of the main principles of the Scientific Method, refers to the ability of a test or experiment to be replicated by independent researchers. We look for the following subsections in the Method section of an APA paper: These subheadings should be left-justified. The "participants" subsection should describe the subjects including total number and their basic demographic information and how they were selected and categorized. It should also explain why some subjects were not included. The subsection for measures and procedures should specify the equipment and materials used in the experiment, including any questionnaires or surveys. This section must also describe in detail how the research was conducted. Results The results section of an APA paper presents the findings. This section should summarize the data collected and the statistical or analytical treatments used. Tables, figures, graphs, charts, drawings, and photographs may be included, but it is important to keep them as simple as possible. Clearly label each visual with an Arabic numeral e. The label and the title should appear flush left on separate lines above the table. Remember to include any source details below the table. Discussion The Discussion section is an interpretation and evaluation of the findings. In this section, based on the findings discussed in the Results section, the author should address the issues raised in the Introduction. This is not simply a reiteration of the results or points previously made. The Discussion section of your APA paper should be organized into the following parts: So there you have it:

A PART (PART PAPER) pdf

For many students, writing the introduction is the first part of the process, setting down the direction of the paper and laying out exactly what the research paper is trying to achieve. For others, the introduction is the last thing written, acting as a quick summary of the paper.
