How the author of "A Prize for Princes" and its plummy, purple prose ever made the transition to 35th Avenue and Nero, Archie, Fritz and Theodore is beyond me. "Her Forbidden Knight", written in , a year before "A Prize for Princes", is somewhat satisfying in a Damon Runyonesque kind of way.

The above criteria guide the selection process. Once examined across the five judging criteria, the nominees are considered as a collective group. When selecting semi-finalists, the aim is to identify a collection of initiatives that represent the diverse cultural approaches to philanthropy from around the world, furthering the reach of the Prize as a source of inspiration for other philanthropic efforts. Department of Education authorized accrediting agency. UoPeople has signed collaborative partnership agreements with New York University NYU to accept students; Microsoft for scholarships, internships and mentoring and with Hewlett-Packard HP , through the Catalyst Initiative, to provide student internship opportunities. About 2, students from over countries have been enrolled. With its tuition-free online programs, University of the People is opening access to higher education for all those constrained, as well as building a scalable and replicable model capable of changing the very nature of higher education. There are no other fees whatsoever. UoPeople strives to ensure, in keeping with its mission, that no qualified individual is excluded for financial reasons. To assist students in financial need, UoPeople has dedicated student scholarship funds. His urban elitist upbringing had distanced him from poverty and destitution. This experience changed him, and formed the determination to fight poverty and inequality. It became his mission. There was no fixed agenda. This search for working models, approaches and strategies led some of them to live and work in villages. In , Meghraj from Tilonia village and Bunker Roy a fresh graduate from Delhi University became friends and shared a dream grafting formal urban knowledge on rural wisdom to create a world without want. Anil Bordia the then collector of Ajmer helped lease an abandoned Tuberculosis Sanatorium premises from the Government at Re. For instance, did you need an engineer to repair a hand pump? Cannot midwives be trained to literally deliver better?! Could not the rich traditional folk arts and music be used for development communication? Instead of training women for leadership, could we not identify strong leaders to facilitate their learning about legal and other constitutional rights? Empowering them to question social oppression, the most difficult to confront in any society? The rural illiterate youth were now the dominant actors, planning, taking charge of activities and initiating ideas. They replaced the urban middle class, transient professional. The Barefoot concept was further strengthened with the rural craft section, supplementing the income of crafts persons and migrant workers, to sell in contemporary markets. All these were a part of the barefoot solutions in the initial years. Whether it was land rights for dalits, claiming minimum wages on public works, mobilising against reprehensible social traditions like sati, public protest against rape, and caste discrimination, the SWRC played a role. The organization travels to conflict zones in the Middle East, Africa and Latin America to identify young adults " especially, though not exclusively, girls " who have exceptional academic talent and leadership qualities. It helps them to apply to top universities and to find work when they graduate. Among other criteria, candidates for BRC Scholarships must be either living in a refugee camp or otherwise displaced by conflict, and committed to finding ways in which they can use the opportunity of an education to contribute to peace and rebuilding in their region of origin. The NGOs that work hard to cater to more than 50 million refugees understandably prioritize emergency needs such as safety, food and shelter. Education takes a back seat. In particular, talented young women in the regions where BRC works tend to be extremely marginalized. They are typically encouraged to marry young rather than to pursue their studies. Often cultural or political pressures keep them away from school. BRC Scholars are also encouraged to work together on cross-border projects. As a diploma is only part of the equation, BRC works hard to get its students first class summer internships and jobs with Fortune companies on graduation. As beacons of hope and positive role models, BRC Scholars remind us that it is possible to create your future and impact the world no matter where you are from. Honorable Mentions SkyTruth, Oceana and Google launched Global Fishing Watch, a big data technology platform that lever- ages satellite data to create the first global view of commercial fishing. Global Fishing Watch will ultimately give citizens a simple, online platform to visualize, track and share information about fishing activity worldwide. Global Fishing Watch will reveal the intensity of fishing effort around the world, one of the stressors contributing to the precipitous decline of our fisheries. As an umbrella organization, the Federation conducts advo- cacy, economical, social, and educational and Environmental programmes to strengthen and empower the small scale fishing and farming communities in self-reliance. Its mission is to act as a catalyst in the development, improvement and growth of youth and children. It is a registered NGO working for the less privileged chil- dren of India through mobilization of youth and resources. Amitabh Shah, the Founder and Chief Inspiration Officer at YUVA Unstoppable, believes that if the previous era of development belonged to an infrastructure revolution and technology advancement, the next one belongs to youth and child empowerment. Amitabh decided to launch this volunteer movement at the age of 23 after he discovered the immense suf- fering experienced by an elderly friend when she was abandoned by her family. He gathered friends and began volunteering at homes for the elderly, slums and orphanages. Touched by the stories he encountered every day and inspired by the enthusiasm of young people to volunteer, he founded YUVA Unstoppable as a platform to spread kindness and compassion. In the past eight years, YUVA Unstoppable has mobilized more than , volunteers and has benefited , less privileged kids, and they are continually working towards increasing that number. The or- ganisation has developed a curriculum to spread awareness among less-privileged children about discipline, hard work, morality, health and hygiene. Volunteers spend two hours a week for 12 weeks to teach this curriculum to municipal school kids. At present, this program is running in 60 schools across Ahmedabad, Jodhpur and Gandhinagar, involving more than 1, volunteers. YUVA Unstoppable, in partnership with Microsoft and Intel, has mobilized hundreds of volunteers across 30 cities of India to teach a digital literacy curriculum specially designed by Microsoft and Intel. All curriculum and resources can be found online in open-source for volunteers to easily exchange and access materials.
