Constantinople to Calais, or leap from the Archipelago to the other extremity of the Mediterranean, from thence cross the English or Irish channel, as caprice may dictate, with a rapidity infinitely surpassing any travelling yet performed by steam boats, steam carriages, or even balloons and above.

Aegean dispute Since the s further issues arose between the two countries over sovereignty rights in the Aegean Sea. The Balkan Wars of had given Greece all the Aegean islands except Imbros and Tenedos , some of them only a few kilometres barely more than three nautical miles off the Turkish coast. Since the end of World War II Turkish officials insisted that this led to questions regarding the delimitation of territorial waters, air space and other related zones of control. The conflict was motivated both by considerations of military tactical advantages and by questions of economic exploitation of the Aegean. The latter issue became particularly significant as after there were expectations of finding oil in the Aegean. This was highlighted during the crisis in , when a Turkish ship was about to enter disputed waters to conduct an oil survey. The Greek Prime Minister of the time, Andreas Papandreu , ordered the ship to be sunk if found within disputed waters claimed by Greece. Issues unresolved to this day concern the mutual delimitation of several zones of control: The width of the territorial waters. Greece claims a right to unilateral expansion to 12 nautical miles, based on the International Law of the Sea. Turkey, which already has expanded its own territorial waters to 12 miles on its other coasts, denies the applicability of the miles rule in the Aegean and has threatened Greece with war in the case it should try to apply it unilaterally. The width of the national airspace. Greece currently claims 10 miles, while Turkey only acknowledges 6 miles. The future delimitation of the continental shelf zone in the international parts of the Aegean, which would give the states exclusive rights to economic exploitation. The right of Greece to exercise flight control over Turkish military flight activities within the international parts of the Aegean, based on conflicting interpretations of the rules about Flight Information Regions FIR set by the ICAO. Turkish aircraft regularly fly in the zones over which Greece claims control i. Aircraft from both countries frequently engage in mock dog-fights. These operations often cause casualties and losses for both the Greek and Turkish Air Forces. The aircraft engaged in a dogfight, during which one of the Turkish pilots fired a Falcon missile against one of the F-5s piloted by Thomas Skampardonis. Skampardonis managed to evade the missile and then the other Greek pilot Ioannis Dinopoulos, who up to that point was undetected by the Turks, fired two AIM-9B missiles. The first AIM-9 missed its target but the second shot down one of the Fs. The pilot of the remaining F became disoriented and fled westwards. When he realized his mistake, he turned east towards the Turkish coast but run out of fuel. This forced him to ditch his aircraft, suffering fatal injuries. Greek pilot Nikolaos Sialmas was killed in the crash. The Turkish pilot Mustafa Yildirim bailed out and was rescued by a Greek helicopter. After brief hospitalization in Rhodes , the pilot was handed over to the Turkish side. During the dogfight that followed, one of the Turkish aircraft went into a steep dive and crashed onto the sea, killing its pilot Altug Karaburun. He was returned to Turkey after receiving first aid treatment in Lesbos. He was rescued by a Greek helicopter and handed over to the Turkish side. Greece officially offered to assist Turkey in its efforts to locate and salvage the Turkish fighter jet. Turkey also refused to accept the flight plan submitted by the Greeks, mentioned that the plane will not be allowed to enter Turkish airspace. Greeks created a new flight plan, the plane flew over Egypt , Cyprus , Jordan and Saudi Arabia so as to reach Iran, according to the new plan. The incident took place in Greek territorial waters east of Imia. Giorgos Baltadoros, 33, as he returned from a mission to intercept Turkish aircraft that had violated Greek air space. The Hellenic Air Force lost contact with the Mirage jet at The Turkish jets, contacted the pilot of the Greek helicopter and asked for flight details. Turkish and Greek soldiers have exchanged fire in the past, as Greeks have tried to stop Iranian refugees from entering the country illegally from Turkey, but this incident was the first in which there have been casualties. During this period, Greek soldiers along the border with Turkey were on alert after receiving reports that Turkey planned to help thousands of refugees slip into Greece illegally. In , the Sismik incident nearly started a war between Greece and Turkey. Greekâ€™Turkish earthquake diplomacy Relations between Greece and neighbouring Turkey improved after successive earthquakes hit both countries in the summer of 1999. The so-called "earthquake diplomacy" generated an outpouring of sympathy and generous assistance provided by ordinary Greeks and Turks in both cases. These acts were encouraged from the top and took many foreigners by surprise, preparing the public for a breakthrough in bilateral relations, which had been marred by decades of hostility over anti-Greek pogroms, territorial disputes and the situation in the divided island of Cyprus. Yet, despite the confidence Greece and Cyprus have shown, voting YES for Turkey in order to begin its entry negotiations with the European Union in October 2005, many key issues remain unresolved. Furthermore, Turkey still denies access to Cypriot vessels to its territory, an obligation towards the EU with a deadline. The Turkish government counters that this restriction regarding Cypriot vessels was taken after the trade embargo decision against the portion of Cyprus illegally occupied by Turkey. The issue remains deadlocked, despite UN and EU attempts to mediate. Other unfulfilled obligations include Christian minority rights, acknowledgement of the Orthodox Church of Constantinople and the role of the Ecumenical Patriarch. A sign of improved relations was visible in the response to a mid-air collision by Greek and Turkish fighter jets in the southern Aegean in May 2005. While the Turkish pilot ejected safely, the Greek pilot lost his life. However, both countries agreed that the event should not affect their bilateral relations [38] and made a strong effort to maintain them by agreeing to a set of confidence-building measures in the aftermath of the accident. Forest arsons[edit] In December 2005, the Turkish newspaper Birgun reported on an interview with former Turkish prime minister Mesut Yilmaz saying that Turkey was behind a number of large forest fires in Greece in the s. Yilmaz later denied the statements, saying he had been misquoted by the newspaper and that he had been actually referring to unsubstantiated reports of Greek involvement in Turkish forest fires. Also, former head of Greek intelligence service said they had intelligence that Turkish agencies were involved in the arsons in the s but had no proof. He said they had received information from their agents in Turkey that Turkish agents or others were involved in the forest fires on Greek islands. He had applied for political asylum in Greece. As a result of bilateral negotiations, a readmission agreement was signed between Turkey and Greece in November 2005 and went into effect in April 2006. For third-country nationals, this protocol gives the parties 14 days to inform each other of the number of persons to be returned after the date of illegal entry. For nationals of the two countries the authorities can make use of simplified procedures. But the strict application of the agreement is reported to have retrograded as of 2006. Incidents concerning illegal immigration are frequent on the border of the two countries. Turkey, which is a transit point for illegal immigrants trying to reach Europe, has been accused of not being able to secure its borders with Greece. Since 40 illegal immigrants have been killed by mines, after entering Greek territory in Evros. At worst, it accompanies them into Greek territorial waters". At Athens officials voiced worries because Turkish monitors overseeing the deal in Greece had been abruptly pulled out after the failed coup without being replaced. In June 2006, a Greek court ordered the extradition of this person to Turkey. On June 23 2006 Turkey condemned the Greek statement. Turkish courts have ordered their detention on suspicion of illegal entry and attempted military espionage. In April 2006, Greece said that Turkey appeared to be seeking some political leverage by continuing to hold the soldiers without trial for more than a month. The Greek side has described this as "blackmail", with the Defence Ministry describing the soldiers as "hostages". Because Greece implemented - I emphasize this - implemented international law, it was granted. He stated that he accidentally crossed the border while carrying out construction work. In 5 May 2006, he returned to Turkey. The soldiers released and returned to Turkey the same day, after the Turkish side held talks with the Greek authorities. An attempt at rapprochement, dubbed the Davos process, was made in 2006. His son, foreign minister George Papandreou, made considerable progress in improving relations. Turkey continues to systematically disregard Greek national sovereign territory by violating air and sea borders.

Be careful who you trust. Americans, Canadians and Australians do not enjoy special treatment. This would then be presented to the local office of your municipality in Greece upon arrival to secure a residence permit based on independent means. The following will prepare you for collecting the correct documents and what you can expect during the process. It is not as simple as getting a visa and showing it to someone in Greece to get a permit. Laws were passed in April and published in May , with the first permit issued late July and 20 total as of September to foreigners from India, Russia, Ukraine, Canada and the United States. It has been criticized as hypocritical and racist, welcoming the rich through a back door while excluding everyone else. Also be aware that this option still does NOT entitle you to obtain Greek citizenship. The visa and residence permit described in this article is based on that very premise. Passport with at least three 3 blank pages “ Many countries offer an option to add pages for a fee if your passport is valid 2. Two 2 recent color passport photos 3. Original policy statements or a letter on company letterhead from your medical insurer verifying current and continuous coverage with repatriation and validity for Greece 4. Official, printed criminal record “ U. All candidates will be asked to appear in person. Your documents will be reviewed, fees will be collected, and you and your family, if applicable will be interviewed. Your passports will then be returned with visas applied, which you can pick up in person or have priority mailed to you for a fee. Applying for the residence permit in Greece You technically have up until the expiration of your visa to apply for this residence permit, but it is recommended you apply within 30 days of arrival in Greece. There is no nationwide standard “ some take appointments, some operate on a first-come, first-serve basis on specific days. To find a location nearest you, look in a map book available for sale at any kiosk periptero or use the List of Greek Police Stations from the Greek Passport Center website, which provides the address, map, phone number and hours of operation for each location: You must submit many of the same documents again. If not in Latin letters, it must be translated to Greek. Application, given to you at the municipality “ Original must be filled out in Greek, then photocopied once without a signature; both are signed when the municipality employee instructs as such. Proof of current and continuous medical insurance “ Insurance can be from back home Tricare, private insurance , which can remain in force or eventually be cut in favor of local private insurance options “ Medicare and Medi-Cal are not acceptable for U. Clean criminal record Optional “ Most municipalities present you with an application, which essentially requests your type A criminal record. You will need two 2 passport photos and your passport. Lawyers can translate e-statements from banks, Internet copies and non-originals within reason. Non-Greek documents may also be translated before arriving in Greece by approved persons, but the cost is almost always higher. If you are a family, you must apply at the same time, though not all members need to be present and children under 14 do not need special visas. However, this is a personal choice. After your papers are verified and accepted, you will be issued a bebaiosi certificate of receipt; blue paper with photo. It is not a permit. It acknowledges papers have been received and you have temporary permission to stay past the validity of your visa, while higher authorities examine your documents. You must carry this bebaiosi with your passport for public and private transactions, as well as legal purposes should a policeman or other authority ask you to present it. Keep a photocopy in a safe place in case the original is lost. The bebaiosi does not necessarily grant you the right to travel outside of Greece. You must remain within the borders until an official permit sticker has been issued and placed in your passport or until you are in possession of an official residence card. If your application is successful, a permit will be issued in the form of a sticker placed in your passport or you will be given a card. The official permit is good for one year. Renewal of the Greek permit Must be renewed at least 60 days in advance of the expiration date, and most of the same documents listed above will be necessary. Traveling with only a bebaiosi blue certificate with photo is still only allowed to your homeland during pre-approved Easter, summer, Christmas or open periods announced by the Ministry of Citizen Protection.
