Michael Dibdin remains one of my favorite authors even though I sometimes find his plots and characterizations frustrating. Whenever I see a Dibdin book out in e-book format, I order it. I know that whatever else I find, it will be literately and beautifully written. To all lovers of Browning I say immediately, you must read this book for its fascinating re-creation of the famous poet, which often uses his own words as dialogue. A Rich Full Death is a mystery story. It is a fascinating and surprising story, with the title making sense only in the last few pages. I had to read the last chapter twice to fully understand just what Dibdin had done. It is, to say the least, a surprising ending. It is redolent of the artistic and literary Italy of the times. I recommend it highly but it is not for everyone. I suspect Dibdin wrote it mainly for himself. And he probably had a grand time doing so. This review contains spoilers though, in my opinion, it would difficult to spoil this book. Murders of English and American people are talking place in Florence at the time the poets Robert Browning and his wife Elizabeth Barrett Browning are living there. The book takes the form of letters to a friend by a Bostonian, Robert Booth. In these letters Booth describes the murders and also the fact that Browning is a better detective than the local police inspector. Set in mid 19th century Florence with a cosmopolitan cast of expats, the feeling of place really shines through. The story is compelling and gripping with lots of nice twists at the end as you would expect. The story revolves around an initial suicide of someone known by the main character, Robert Booth. He gets into a friendship with the poet Robert Browning and they start to investigate the circumstances as they believe it was a murder. A second killing follows and the story spirals from there. Believable and atmospheric; just what you need for a historical thriller. Review will shown on site after approval. Review will shown on site after approval Other books by Fiction.
