Acts 29 - A diverse, global family of church-planting churches Connect on social: Why Training is Important
As a family of church-planting churches we are about one thing: We are in the business of planting healthy churches, which means that we are in the business of watering them as well. Paul describes himself as having planted, cf. This passage also contains warnings that should make every one of us think twice about going ahead without adequate preparation. We must be alert to the warnings in 1 Cor 3: Paul planted by proclaiming the word of the cross 1 Cor 1: It was this message of the cross that was the foundation. All subsequent building work, to grow or establish the church, had to follow the structure laid out by that foundation, cf. They set the shape and scale, and take the weight of the subsequent edifice. If a builder builds without reference to the foundations, they effectively build a new and profoundly flimsy structure. This means theological formation is critical to our task, because church planting is a theological enterprise, before it is anything else. For the writers of the New Testament, Christ crucified and risen is both the content and lens of theology. What we know about God, is revealed in and through the gospel. The call to build with Christ is a call to build with theology as our blueprint and our tool. In stark terms, this means that a theologically untrained church planter, risks lives which are precious to God. It is for this reason that Acts 29, has always taken theological formation seriously. Church planting has to be driven and shaped by theology. Those who go into it need to be equipped to be able to work from first principles to action. They will need to deal with difficult pastoral situations and complex ethical dilemmas. They need to understand how the gospel connects with culture and devise a coherent gospel-centered strategy. We are currently developing training resources, using the widely used Porterbrook material along with other tried and tested material. We are launching two specific training projects: Acts 29 Training Programs Urban Minority Church Planting Church Planting Residencies allow men to be equipped to plant a church in the context of an existing healthy church, with an intentional mentor, and the incredible peer relationship benefits of a cohort of men all being trained to do the same. Specifically, we feel like it is most strategic to intentionally focus resources and attention on minority leaders for these Church Planting Residencies. We are set for a soft launch in September with a curriculum, over 30 students, two part time faculty members and Oak Hill teaching support. We are aiming to offer a full suite of courses, including accredited courses beginning in September The academy aims to train planters and gospel workers for Europe through a combination of distance learning curriculum, in-context seminar day support and short residential teaching programs. We want this to be a pilot project and discussions have already begun with theological institutions in other parts of the world to construct and launch similar but culturally nuanced projects. 3: Church Planting Resources | Southern Baptists of Texas Convention

This book is called a technical manual for church planters because it focuses on many details that one has to deal with in the process of forming a new congregation. The author is both a college professor, a conflict transformation practitioner, a pastor and a church planter.

Many thanks to Baker Publishing for sending me this review copy: There are four main parts of this book: There is an appendix which contains a helpful bibliography and topical index but sadly no scripture index. I appreciated the many real-life examples of church plants around the world, which helped the authors explain the different nuances of planting. I also liked the charts and helpful diagrams throughout the chapters. The book is well written, concise, and the subdivisions in the chapters make for easy reading. This is the ideal book for a seminary setting or an advanced course on planting churches. More on the four parts. In part one Ott and Wilson discuss many different biblical texts that deal with missions and church planting. They answer questions that have to do with the church in general, reasons for planting churches, church planting in Acts, and other such topics. Part two is about historical church plant movements and methods, including those of John Nevius, Roland Allen, David Garrison, and movements from countries around the world. Ott and Wilson also give historical examples of all these types in this section. I appreciated this because I do believe church planters in our culture, for example, can and should learn from those in other cultures past and present. Part three has to do with the phases of church planting “from the beginning to the end. The authors talk about demographics, targeting, commissioning leaders, launching, structuring, discipling, and other issues like these. This part is the longest part of the book because it has to do with the nuts and bolts of what it means to start a church plant and keep the work going until it is an organized local church with leadership structure in place. Though my review may make this book sound like a dry technical manual about planting churches, it is not that at all. The authors frequently talk about the main point of planting churches: This is one resource I will be using and recommending for many years. If you get it, be sure to read it with a notebook handy so you can make notes along the way.
