The good ones are the settlers, who are making the prairie bloom. The bad ones are the Indians, who are blood-thirsty savages. The ultimate hero is the cowboy, tough, humane, with a big revolver or two, ready to defend himself at all times. This week he presented the world with an up-to-date western. In this western - or, rather, middle eastern - there are also Good Guys and Bad Guys. It is a simple script. So simple, indeed, that an 8-year-old can understand it. The conclusions are also simple: At the end, the hero - George himself - will ride off into the sunset on his noble steed, while the music reaches a crescendo. Or the United States Cavalry attacking the camps of the Indians, burning down the tents and killing their inhabitants, men, women and children. How the US government, after signing formal treaties with the Indian nations, breaks them one after another. And how it drives the remnants into desolate regions, long before the term "ethnic cleansing" was first used. This finds its main expression in a simple fact: In the Palestinian community, for example, there is a struggle between the "moderates" and the "extremists". The extremists are killers. Why are they killers? There is no why. They are killers because they are killers. They were just born that way. The moderates are moderates because they are moderates. Some people are just born good. So the whole problem is a Palestinian problem. They must choose between moderates and extremists. If they choose the moderates, they will get everything they can imagine: If they choose the extremists, their end will be bitter. The Jewish Israelis do not have to choose between good and bad. Simply because there are no Bad Guys among them. They are just good. They must help the good Palestinians. Not to the Palestinian government, but to one specific named person, the darling of Bush. What else is required from the Israelis? They must understand that their "future lies in developing areas like the Negev and Galilee - not in continuing occupation of the West Bank". They should remove unauthorized outposts and end settlement expansion. Also, they may "find other practical ways to reduce their footprint in the West Bank without reducing their security". A long time ago, the United States viewed all settlements as illegal. When the Israeli government continued to expand them, James Baker, the Secretary of State under Bush the father, imposed financial sanctions upon Israel. Bush the son at first demanded that all settlements established after January should be dismantled. Later he withdrew all opposition to the settlement blocs "centers of population". In the "Road Map" he decreed that Israel must immediately freeze the enlargement of the settlements. All this without "or else" or any mention of sanctions. In the last few years, only one such outpost, Amona, has been dismantled, and this week Ehud Olmert decided to pardon all the fanatics accused of attacking the police during that event. The Israeli government knows that Bush is only paying lip service, and does not take him seriously. George Bush has his own patent medicine, which appears in the speech again and again. It will heal all diseases and ensure the final victory of the Sons of Light over the Sons of Darkness. The label on the bottle says "Building Palestinian Institutions". Why did we go chasing off after all kinds of solutions, and did not find this one, so simple, lying in front of us for all to see? The Palestinians have no institutions. The two good people, "President Abbas and Prime Minister Fayadâ€are striving to build the institutions of a modern democracy. By the way, in this matter Bush has another patent medicine: In order to realize the vision of "building Palestinian institutions", Bush is sending along his poodle. According to Bush, the sole task of Tony Blair is indeed this: Or perhaps even Iraq? As far as Bush is concerned, that just did not happen, since the majority of the people voted for Hamas. Therefore, Bush mentions only the elections held before that, when Mahmoud Abbas was elected president, practically without opposition. Everything else has been wiped off the slate. So this is the up-to-date vision: What a wonderful sentence! But a hint is given: Nothing new, nothing that could cause a self-respecting newspaper to give it a headline. I imagine the media advisor saying: The key participants in this meeting will be the Israelis, the Palestinians, and their neighbors in the region. Secretary Rice will chair the meeting. A meeting which has no date yet, but has a season of the year. And for which no location has yet been fixed. And no list of participants. And no planned conclusions, except the general statement: They will look for innovative and effective ways to support further reform. And they will provide diplomatic support for the parties in their bilateral discussions and negotiations, so that we can move forward on a successful path to a Palestinian state. It is not by accident that Bush omitted to identify the governments he intends to invite. Clearly, he will try to fulfill one of the most cherished dreams of Olmert: For Olmert this would be an immense achievement: A meeting for which he will not have to pay any price. It is dubious whether this wish will be fulfilled. The Saudis are very cautious. They do not want to quarrel with any party in the Region - not with Syria which will not be invited, though it is a "neighbor" of the Israelis and the Palestinians and not with Hamas. It has enough of its own. That is a far-far-off aim. Not for nothing is it called a "political horizon", since a horizon, as is well-known, recedes in the distance as one tries to approach it. In his poem "If", Rudyard Kipling describes all the tests an Englishman has to endure in order to be considered a "man". One of them is: In his mouth, it is an empty, deceitful and mendacious slogan. Only a fool will fall into this trap. As Chaim Weizmann, the prominent Zionist leader and first president of Israel, once said: Nations achieve their freedom by political or military struggle. Every struggle, violent or non-violent, is a matter of power. And power means first of all:
