The Meaning of Flowers: But which flowers do you give for which occasion? We asked our e-Tutors to share with us some traditions for giving flowers in their culture to see what differences we could find. We discovered that simple cultural differences in giving flowers can make all the difference. Take the potted plant. In Japan, however, you should never give a sick person a potted plant. Color The color of flowers has great significance in certain cultures. In the Arab world, white and light-colored flowers are usually presented on birth, engagement and marriage and to young women. In Germany, white flowers are funeral flowers. If you give white flowers to your German mother-in-law you may inadvertently give a message you did not mean to send! Yellow and orange flowers signify joy of life, blue means freedom, and pink conveys sweeter emotions or intimacy. In Italy, the colors of flowers all have distinct meanings as well. A floreale tribute with yellow tulips and generally the color yellow is related to betrayal, but also a symbol of luxury, glory and success. Orange is a color that symbolizes joy and happiness, and accomplishment of successful endeavor. A bunch of pink flowers is the symbol of youth and expresses a love that is newborn. Pink flowers are associated with a happy event like a wedding and also represent admiration. A dark red flower symbolizes perseverance, continuity and immortality. The color purple expresses sentiments of modesty, generosity and humility. It is the symbol of an insurmountable shyness. A lilac colored flower represents a sincere love without any expectations, something one would offer to friends. Light blue flowers are ideal for a wedding and as a gift of flowers in the springtime. Turquoise is a shade that symbolizes achievement for those who are involved with the arts or sciences and is suitable for celebrating degrees and diplomas. Gifts of seasonal greenery or plants in general symbolize hope or a danger escaped and also represent joy and optimism. In both Korea and Brazil, the flower most associated with funerals is a white chrysanthemum. In Greece, carnations are associated with funerals. But the carnation in Greece has another function: Women give each other yellow, pink or white flowers. Giving flowers to a man is not that unusual in Italy. Number The number of flowers you give can have significance in different cultures as well. In Brazil, a single flower is given in romantic situations before or after a dinner date. In Greece and Eastern European cultures, it is customary to give an odd number of flowers. Roses Roses might be the most meaningful flower across the globe, but what meaning that is depends on where you are. In Vietnam, if you give someone a single rose, it is saying that you are in love with that person. In Korea, however, roses have a less romantic association: The day is also known as the Feast of Saint George. According to the legend, a rose grew from the blood of a dragon killed by Saint Jordi Saint George. The tradition of giving roses to loved ones goes back to the nineteenth century. Since then, the tradition started to include books as well as roses. The day is not only celebrated in Catalonia but it has spread to the rest of Spain. Want to say it with more than flowers?
