1: Table of contents for Vogue living

Lavishly illustrated in full color, a book of thirty-six spectacular houses and gardens whose owners come from the worlds of fashion, music, art, and society drawing on stories from the pages of Vogue and Vogue Living as well as never-before-published images by iconic photographers.

Send address changes to: According to some of the professionals we spoke with, a lot of uptowners are forgoing Central Park views and heading south some to be closer to their kids and grandkids, some because downtown makes them feel more youthful. From her blog, lifelutzurious. For our own downtown shopping guide in this issue, visit page For a long time, I lived at the northern tip of what was and still is quite the perfect perch: This unspoiled stretch of colorful Colonial Revival style houses looks more like Charleston than Manhattan. They even share a very neat communal garden with the equally cheerful houses behind them on Sullivan Street. That view made getting up for work extra easy in those days. At night, after work, I loved rolling into Lupa or Bar Pitti for pasta. Who would ever give that up? This city keeps us on the move and moving. At Quest, we know our uptown territory well, but we are downtowners, too so, for the second year in a row, we present our Downtown Issue. He gets to you. His wife of 43 years, Lani, accompanies with her voice. Alpert, who is now in his mids, but age and numbers never get in the way of his entertaining us folks. This is a big event with several hundred guests, mainly women putting their best foot forward and happy to be back in town and on the go. This year they honored Thom Browne. Whoopi Goldberg, hilarity aside, talked about her friendship with the designer whose work she admires and whose clothes she wears. They raised almost a million dollars for the museum. Meanwhile, here in town, New Yorkers for Children held its 18th annual fall gala. The black-tie evening coincidentally is also a fashion event during Fashion Week, as the younger set turns out in glamour and chic and camera-ready. And then later at 8 p. Geoffrey is a consummate host, one of the last men or women standing who entertains his guests with a generosity and elegance that sets the tone and makes everyone comfortable and convivial. It was also a special night for the host who was born and grew up in South Africa and was celebrating on this day his 40th anniversary of becoming a U. The message is respite. Even the walk inside the museum to the elevator is uplifting, passing through just a few of the fabulous collections. There is so much to see, so much to look at so much wonder. As I do every time I visit the Met, I was chastising myself for not going more often only a mile and a half down the same 83rd Street from my apartment. Exiting the Met from the top of the steps I took a picture of the Benjamin Duke House on the corner of East 82nd Street facing the museum steps. The mansion was built between and as a spec house for one family eight stories high and 20, square feet. It was designed in the Beaux Arts style. Duke, father of Doris Duke, bought the house six years later in and lived there until his own mansion at 1 East 78th Street was ready for occupancy in Both Duke houses are New York City Landmarks, thankfully, and will remain standing with their original exteriors. Meanwhile, across the sea, over in France, on that Tuesday Prince Aynon Aga Khan Aynon to his many friends celebrated his 80th birthday at a party for guests, many from the United States. Because of your commitment, people with vision loss gain clear guidance, coordinated care and a community of support, so they can lead full and independent lives. As we enter the season of giving thanks, we thank you for helping bring people the care they need. Through their philanthropic passion and purpose, all three honorees have had a lifelong impact on the lives and health of those affected by vision loss. I had wanted to see it for a couple of reasons, the first being what motivated the legend, and the second because it was at the Frick. The Frick is not some other screening room. Your presence there announces something quite contrary. It is at times a wonder, a solace, and an elevation of spirit. The Cinema Society is a brilliant marketer of product, and here was the evidence. From the beginning, it was a pleasure just to be there. I got there on time but it turned out to be too early. Waiters in black tie were holding trays of sparkling water or Champagne. And women obviously adore him. Coincidentally on that Saturday night, I had dinner with a friend and told her I had seen the film. All she earned in that part-time job. She still has them, and sometimes still wears them. The man himself is an artist, born and bred. He grew up on a remote Spanish Canary Island, where the little boy would catch lizards and make shoes out of candy wrappers for them. This childhood fascination has remained with him entirely. I could go on and on about the wonders of Manolo, a very charming man with an almost but not quite childlike sense of humor. But you must see this film for the sheer pleasure of learning about him. His greatest pleasure each day is to go to his factory and personally make the sample. It was an additional pleasure to see Ms. Wintour, whom I do not know, never having met her and only having seen her numerous times from across a crowded room. The public image without voice is rather like viewing ice wrapped in silks and cashmere. However, on film, you see quite a different image. She only wears Manolo, she said.

Blurring the distinctions between music, performance, writing, and art, Ono was a pioneer in conceptual and performance art, and led the way to political activism in antiwar pieces she staged with John Lennon. Ono married Lennon in 1968. In all, approximately 50 early works on paper, installations, performances, audio recordings, and films will be shown. Fast-forward 55 years, and MoMA visitors will again be invited to interact, walking up and onto a new iteration of Painting to Be Stepped On. In this early performance at a Kyoto concert hall, Ono sits on the floor, in silence, as people come up, one by one, and cut off pieces of her clothing with a huge pair of scissors. She later performed this meditation on generosity, violence, and vulnerability in New York and Paris. The famous Beatle followed the installation directions: On it, in tiny print, the word: But. Ono wanted this version to be even more interactive. People inside the coarse burlap bags can see out, she told the curators: The exterior of the new Whitney Museum. The new location features 50,000 square feet of exhibition space in a 1,000,000-square-foot building, as well as theaters, classrooms, and outdoor areas. The wildly eclectic lineup ranges from hip-hop Drake to techno Deadmau5 to alt-rock My Morning Jacket, with a healthy dose of up-and-coming bands amid the established ones. Other events include Luc Sante and Michael Ondaatje discussing memoir, and Tom Stoppard speculating about humankind in the year Released in conjunction with the opening of his new Edition hotel on Madison Square Park, the book contains lush photographs of his signature properties, essays by Philippe Starck and others, and reflections by Schrager himself on his remarkable year career. Buy it and see your coffee table become a design destination. I demand full attention and commitment. Barrie and the creation of Peter Pan. As she sits in the balcony of the Lunt-Fontanne Theatre, where Finding Neverland was about to begin preview performances prior to opening on April 15, Paulus, 48, is a striking figure, with piercing almondshaped eyes and long black hair cascading around her shoulders. After years of directing experimental, operatic, and regional productions, she ventured onto Broadway for the first time five years ago with the revival of Hair, the counterculture musical, which she followed with Broadway revivals of Porgy and Bess and Pippin. At first glance, Finding Neverland may not seem quite as revolutionary as her previous shows. But for Paulus, it is her greatest, and perhaps most personal, challenge yet. At her side was Randy Weiner, her high school sweetheart, muse, and now husband of 20 years. Having kids has enriched my life as an artist. Everything you read applies equally to the creative process. They got me excited about publishing it instead of being terrified. It used to be a Ukrainian Socialist speakeasy and feels that way still. But a career in writing seemed likely; her father, Jason McManus, is the former editor-in-chief of Time, Inc. But New York City is prominent, too. In her writing, she says, she borrows a rule from the world of interior design. It has long been her mission to keep prevention at the forefront of cancer initiatives. What do you hope to achieve with this summit? We hope to motivate people to move forward with action. For many years, Dr. Colditz will be the keynote speaker at the summit. Physical exercise, no smoking, limiting or eliminating alcohol, and protecting skin from the sun are also keys in prevention. Cuomo, a diagnostic radiologist and author of A World Without Cancer, wants more funding for cancer prevention studies. Then there are the less obvious things. They include the toxic chemicals in our foods, personal care products, and cosmetics. Legislation has been proposed in New York. California is the only state in the union that has safer consumer product regulations. What companies would you single out for minimizing harmful ingredients in personal care products? Today many companies in the United States are offering cosmetics and personal care products with fewer or no known harmful chemicals. Several not-for-profit organizations list these companies and keep track of the progress of legislation protecting consumers from harmful products. Organizations such as the Campaign for Safe Cosmetics safecosmetics. We can advocate as consumers by asking elected officials to pass legislation that will protect us from harmful chemicals, some of which are cancer-causing, in products we use every day. Everything from toothpaste and shampoo to makeup foundation and mascara frequently contain chemicals that may be harmful. In , President Nixon declared war on cancer. Billions have been spent since that time, enormous progress has been made, but the disease has hardly been eradicated. In fact, cancer prevention should be a national priority for the United States. Scientists should have financial incentives to focus their research on prevention. The summit is open to the public, but seating is very limited. My husband, Chris Frissora, is board treasurer of Common Ground, an important nonprofit that fights homelessness by developing housing with on-site support services.
