From Newtown kills, 1 from Hempstead plains, from Gravesend far away, prisoner. He was released on his arrival there, by the Govern ment of the Dutch West India Company, who reprimanded their officer for this act of tyranny. The savage Indian stops anear, against a tree he stands, He hears the messenger of peace, the bow drops from his hands. A church it stands, whose pavement is the turf, on which I tread, 1 The charter granted by Charles II. Sir Edmund Andros, who had been recently appointed Governor of New England, repaired to Hartford, with a body of troops and demanded the surrender of the document, which being secretly conveyed to the hollow of an oak tree in the town, since known as the " Charter Oak," was there safely preserved. No splendid dome, though blest by priest, where thousands bend the knee To worship God, is fitter place or holier than this tree. A thousand years mayst thou, old oak, still flourish in the land, Thy boughs still wave above, below, thy trunk still firmly stand. The following lines are an attempt to render a part of the opera of " I Lombard! If the translation has no other merit, it is, at any rate, literal. During her captivity a passion has sprung up between her and Oronte, son of Acciano, king of that city. She hears the well-known battle-cry of the Crusaders, " Dio lo vuole," "Dio lo vuole" God wills it , and exclaims: The dark veil falls before my eyes, Oh, force divine! No, my friends, but here, Where fashion reigns supreme, At this time of year One must not be seen. One day at the open door Knelt the anchorite, While the forest darker grew With the shades of night From the waters of the lake Slowly mists arise, Through the clouds the moon is seen Floating in the skies. The waters foam, then sink to rest, Then they foam again ; When suddenly a female form Rises from the main. Light as shadows of the night, And white as morning snows Upon the hills, the beauteous nymph From the lake arose. Silently she draws anear, And sits upon the bank, Gazing towards him, while she dries Her tresses moist and dank. Moved, he contemplates her form, Tremblingly he stands, Whilst the Naiad of the Lake Beckons with her hands. Then, like a shooting star whose track We mark across the skies, She sinks beneath the slumbering waves Before his wondering eyes. Unwittingly before his eyes, Whichever course they take, Stands the shadowy figure of The Naiad of the Lake. Again the darkness of the night The gloomy wood enshrouds, Once more the pale and silvery moon Mounts above the clouds. Then playing with the sparkling waves, She child-like laughs and cries, And calls the hermit to draw near, Between her tender sighs. I think I can hear you all ask what the news is, And so, once again, I will call on the Muses. The glorious fourth, 3 in some things inglorious, 1 Newport and the places afterwards mentioned are fashion able resorts in the summer season. It is kept as a holiday throughout the Union, and in the larger towns the military volunteers parade and march through the principal streets. The name of the gentleman is Mr. What the author saw and heard on his way to, and at the great race between Fashion and Peytona, over the Long Island race-course, on the 13th May, On, on they ride, one half outside, A dozen hanging on behind. The best representative of their respective stables was selected for the straggle, and from the known characteristics of the inhabitants of the two sec tions, the contest was said to be between " Southern pluck and Northern bottom. From many a form of loveliness once seen beyond the sea Which haunts me still, from visions fair my thoughts will turn to thee. And hear me swear, St. Valentine, whose aid this day I call, The maid to whom these lines are sent is fairer than them all. The monarch would frequently watch the artist at his work, and, on one occasion, when the latter dropped his pencil, the Emperor raised it from the floor, and handing it to the painter, said to his astonished courtiers, "It becomes Caesar to serve Titian. What monsters roam upon the earth? What mighty giants can I slay to prove my love is true? Oh, had I lived in knightly days! Pray, when to Astor Place 1 you go, and rise to leave your seat, Can you not drop by accident a rose-bud at your feet? N a Square, at number three, Lives the fair Miss Coralie. One of the Three, one of the Nine. In accomplishments excels, And she is the belle of belles ; Of all languages is master, And in singing rivals Pasta, But she goes an octave higher, And in playing beats De Meyer; Sketches too, and draws, and paints Heads of warriors and of saints. Would you like to know her taste? Some in a lunatic asylum, 2 Hoboken, in the State of New Jersey, and on the side of the Hudson opposite to New York, was the favourite resort of the hot bloods of the latter place for settling " affairs of honour. T evening, in my rocking chair I swing with gentle motion, While Fancy paints the fancy ball In Newport, at the Ocean. Russians and Poles walk arm in arm, And Turks take wine together, 1 Pronounced calaysayro. The driver of an open carriage in Spain, called calesa. And Ravenswood 1 is very gay, In cap without the feather. A pale faced nun all robed in white, Is waltzing with a templar ; That monk who near the table stands, Must be a bad exemplar. A knight approaches to confess, With holy resolution, The monk first gives a glass of wine ; Then gives him absolution. Rebecca takes a slice of ham, Of Jewish laws a breaker ; The novice too forgets her vows, While flirting with a Quaker. In spite of glass, no lady here Polks more than Cinderella ; In spite of tongue, no lady fair Talks more than mute Fenella. Where are they all? Some have gone home to dream of stocks, And some of sweet Fenella, And some have left a heart behind, And some a silk umbrella. And some are dashing through Broadway, Between a horse and tiger ; Some seek a Paris sauce, and some The sources of the Niger ; 1 The packet ships or "liners," plying at this time between New York and Liverpool, London and Havre, were unrivalled for speed and comfort. Written on the news reaching England that the State of California had adopted a Constitution prohibiting Slavery in her territory. The sacred cause of freedom Henceforth unites our fate, Then hail with fondest welcome, Our youngest sister State. AA 2 PS P61a.
