Always wanted to kayak the coast of Greenland? Stay in Mongolian Ger camp? You can create a trip to do just that and bring a group of fellow AMC members with you. Leaders research and plan their own trips and submit a trip proposal to the AMC adventure Travel committee for review and approval. Learn from Our Experience As a co-leader you will have the opportunity to work closely with someone who has led AMC Adventure Travel trips before, a required and invaluable experience, before leading your own trips. The community of Leaders offers a wealth of travel experience. Leading trips will allow you to share your passion and knowledge for the outdoors! Meet New People Our small groups provide the perfect opportunity to meet people who share your love of nature and discovery. You just might make some new lifelong friends. Each trip is led by an approved Leader and one or two Co-leaders. Have successfully led at least 3 weekend AMC trips. Recommended in writing by the Chair or Leadership Coordinator of the Chapter or Committee responsible for oversight of your weekend trips. Have successfully led or co-led an AMC chapter trip of 3 or more days and have obtained positive participant feedback. Meeting the above requirements does not automatically qualify one for Adventure Travel leadership status. All materials should be submitted to the Adventure Travel Program Manager. The following must be completed one month prior to the deadline for submitting your first trip: Letter of Recommendation as stipulated above in the requirements. Completion of as many chapter trip requirements as possible listed above. Other requirements, such as the first aid certifications, can be done after a trip proposal is submitted but must be completed prior to departing on the trip. Once the above materials have been submitted, the Leader Subcommittee will review the Co-Leader application. Although leading trips for other organizations is valuable, AMC leadership experiences insure an understanding of AMC practices. In Addition to the Co-leader requirements above a Leader must: This allows the AMC Adventure Travel Committee to evaluate leadership and trip planning skills on a trip involving less risk. This workshop provides important training to people who have AMC chapter leadership experience no beginners to transition from leading weekend chapter activities to more complex and longer trips, domestically and overseas. Previous outdoor leadership training is necessary. Emphasis is on planning, cost estimating, marketing, trip management, people skills, risk management, and reporting. Includes procedures and guidelines for researching, proposing, and leading AMC Adventure Travel trips. Small group size assures abundant discussion and access to instructors. Please register by October 5th. For details contact Registrar Merri Fox. There are both domestic and international trips, and the duration of the trips vary from one week to three weeks. First, the program allows you to build on your current chapter leadership skills and challenges you to create a unique experience for yourself and other AMC members. It allows you to discover new locations with a group of people with similar interests or to revisit some old favorites from a different perspective. The program is designed to subsidize most or all of your costs related to the excursion through a careful budgeting process. See in particular the Introduction and Chapter 1, Leader Qualifications. If you already have significant chapter leadership experience, the process can take as little as a year. If you are just starting out as a leader, there are a few minimum requirements related to chapter trip leading that need to be fulfilled. AMC Adventure Travel leadership training is required, and since the course is only offered once a year, it is important to do the workshop at an appropriate time. The other requirements can be fulfilled over time. What if you do not have Chapter leadership experience? What do you learn in this leadership training that is different from the Chapter leadership training? The AMC-AT leadership training focuses much more in-depth on logistics, budgeting and developing skills to deal with group dynamics over a longer time period. It builds on your current leadership skills and knowledge of the AMC, its policies and procedures. Topics covered include travel logistics, budgeting and reporting, application procedures, risk management, screening, marketing and group dynamics. You are expected to arrive Friday night or Saturday morning and stay until Sunday mid-afternoon. When is the next training? Adventure travel offers a weekend long training workshop

Adventure: Lonely Leader (Beryl E. Bean Series) by Ricki Stern, Amy June Bates, Heidi P. Worcester Beryl's way too busy to play host when Alex moves into her home while his parents are away. He can't keep his nose out of her stuff, but her classmates think he's great -- and they're ignoring her!

Older Readers Baby Animals Usborne illustrated by Rachel Lockwood - Very young children will enjoy discovering puppies, tiger cubs and other young animals in this bright and lively board book. Baby Animals is sturdy enough to be explored by curious young children on their own; and it is also ideal for sharing with an adult as its large, realistic illustrations and very simple text lead to lots of looking, pointing, and talking. Hardcover board book, 12 pages. Building Site Usborne Chunkies - A chunky board book for little hands to hold, featuring building sites. Photographed scenes show the vehicles in action and are peopled with models of builders, workers and drivers. Board book, 10 pages. It is a story of simplicity and observation, one that gives glimpses of the ancient culture of Japan, as well of what it is to be a poet. Includes examples of the haiku verses he composed as well as the characters of the Japanese language. A Yoga Parade of Animals: A First Book of Yoga for Children by Pauline Mainland, illustrated by Chris Perry - Using cheerful illustrations, simple text, and clear photos, "A Yoga Parade of Animals" shows kids how to assume the shape of their favorite animals--each of which corresponds to a basic yoga position. She prefers to listen and watch. Charlene has a lot to say, but not always with word. But Charlene has a secret: Shy Charlene loves to make noise! Colorful gouache illustrations accompany the text. Back cover has a corner crease. From the top of her tiara down to her sparkly studded shoes, Nancy is determined to teach her family a thing or two about being fancy. How Nancy transforms her parents and little sister for one enchanted evening makes for a story that is funny and warm -- with or without the frills. When they put the fire out and return to their dinner at the station house, the alarm sounds again. Firestorm by Jean Craighead George, illustrated by Wendell Minor - Axel, his aunt and uncle and his dog, Grits, are on a river-kayaking adventure when the family is caught in a blazing fire storm and must find a shelter where they can wait out the fire safely. Based on a true story. Ages younger for read-aloud. Inside a Barn in the Country: One after another, the animals in the barn wake each other up with the unique sounds they make. This rebus read-along story is sure to delight and educate children at the same time. A rebus is representation of a word by a picture or symbol. In this book, words and rebuses are used together; it is a fun way to learn how to read. Where Can I Be? At Home by Dia L. Michels - In charming photographs and simple words, young readers share a guessing game with a baby. An adorable baby dozes amid the hubbub of her busy home. She never leaves home, yet she wakes up to a new surprise after each daily nap. The engrossing photographs in this guessing game book teach the youngest family members about their immediate environment. Look what Baby can see-and learn-in the kitchen, the living room, the bedroom, the backyard and more! At first, she focuses on a detail, but then, as the page turns, an entire scene is revealed. Intended for the youngest readers, this guessing game book shows children how to be aware of the world around them. Look What I See! In every group photo there is a consistent feature, the discovery of which will delight older children as they share the book. Captures the daily routines of an attachment parenting family I like that the family featured in the book is a real one, with a realistic looking home environment. It can be read to a younger child or can be read by an emerging reader. In the Neighborhood by Dia L. Accompanied by her family, Baby finds herself waking up in seven neighborhood situations. Exploring the neighborhood from the warm embrace of a loving family, Look What I See! Captures the daily routines of an attachment parenting family. Wakened by the sounds and smells of the places where different animals reside, Baby opens her eyes and sees a lively detail-an eye, an ear, a hoof, a head. At first, she focuses on the detail, but then, as the page turns, an entire scene is revealed. Help Baby solve the mysteries of this guessing game book. Where would she see the furry ears of a German shepherd pup? Celebrates the fun of exploring new places, the excitement of seeing real animals, and the joy of bringing home a new pet. Included is a timeline and bibliography at the back of the book. Illustrated with color paintings. Through a series of other misadventures he is ultimately turned into this book. The book has a little cloth leash attached that you can use as a bookmark or to walk your

"dog". The little dog suggests that there are advantages to having a book dog: The author is the prize-winning author of MAUS. Now the Caldecott artist has added words the original was wordless and painted bigger illustrations in her signature whimsical style to accommodate a larger-sized read-aloud book. But what has not changed is a timeless story about the hurt of being lost, and the joy of being found again. Winner of the Caldecott Medal. See-Through Reptiles by Steve Parker, illustrated by Rod Ferring - Using acetate overlays, this innovative book brings readers up-close with reptiles. Lizards, snakes, turtles, crocodiles, and other reptiles come alive as kids get an up-close look at the way a chameleon changes color, or a baby crocodile develops in an egg. But when a very simple tea for one little pig quickly becomes a party of two. A great way to learn to count! The watercolor art style complements the text. Color illustrations accompany the text. Also included is the official companion book to the series, Alias Declassified: The Official Companion by Mark Cotta Vaz, which provides a behind-the-scenes look at the making of the shows. It includes a DVD. There are eight books total. The Companion has some creasing on the back cover and a small scratch on the front. Some of the books are out of print. The Hork Bajir Chronicles by K. Applegate - Before the Animorphs, the fight begins on another world. Prior to their invasion of Earth, the Yeerks attack a gentle and docile species known as the Hork-Bajir. This is the story of a special Hork-Bajir, his Andalite friend, and their future enemy, Visser Three. Invasion! Beryl E. Bean. Beryl's way too busy to play host when Alex moves into her home while his parents are away. He can't keep his nose out of her stuff, but her classmates think he's great -- and they're ignoring her!

I think it is inescapable. Hinckley One of the most famous American photos was captured by reporter George Tames on February 10, The picture is of President John F. Kennedy, recently inaugurated, standing hunched over in the Oval Office. From behind, it looks as if he is carrying the weight of the world on his shoulders. Kennedy, who had a bad back, was simply reading the newspapers standing up, as he often preferred to do. Still, the image, which the New York Times would later christen, "The loneliest job in the world," would take on greater significance as Kennedy navigated through the Cuban Missile Crisis and other global challenges. Some argue that the loneliest professionals in the world are those who toil in isolation, with limited opportunity for interpersonal communication. These include writers, poets, and scientific researchers working in remote outposts. Yet there are others who weigh loneliness not by the frequency or infrequency of their interactions with others but rather with the quality of such exchanges. Therapists, for example, often feel lonely, despite the many deep conversations that they have on an average day. Because they tend to spend so much of their time listening and giving to others, they do not benefit from the balanced conversation and idea exchange that meets their own social needs. The same could be said for teachers. The author argued that teachers were required to go into independent classrooms each day and spend many hours alone with students, hardly a satisfying set of social partners. They often had little time to chat with peers and even less time engaging in meaningful learning and problem solving activities with colleagues. As a former classroom teacher I know that it can feel lonely at times to occupy your day communicating with others who are not your peers and cannot relate to your experiences and passions. They can ask questions on how to get things done and work through tough times with their peers, without unreasonable concern that they will be unnecessarily or unfavorably judged or worse. They can also "hang" with their associates after work, as a natural extension of their time together in the office. Leaders, on the other hand, have fewer people to turn to when things get tough. Who in the organization, after all, has had to sign off on the types of decisions that they must make each day? It can certainly be difficult to confide in and bare their souls to direct reports. And those who sit above them in the corporate or organizational food chain such as the chairman of the board are also not the ones to whom they want to display weakness or vulnerability. Furthermore, it can be awkward and inappropriate for bosses to try to chum up with their coworkers. May times it can be both fun and healthy and offer all parties the chance to see each other in a different light. But at the end of the day the boss is the boss, and that still spells social isolation for the guy calling the shots. Not only do such settings provide leaders with meaningful learning opportunities to strengthen their skills and augment their toolkits, but they also offer safe havens for leaders to open up about problems to others who can relate to their struggles and provide concrete suggestions if not solutions. Oftentimes, these business convenings also develop into social relationships that add balance to the lives of these high powered execs. Leaders should also make time to attend classes and trainings with members of their executive team and board of directors. Learning together and sharing ideas in a "neutral" setting can open up pathways towards deeper bonding that may not otherwise occur. Of course, there are other ways to reduce feelings of loneliness, such as by having a strong network of family and friends to turn to outside the office. Hiring a coach or therapist can also help fill a social void besides for the other benefits that they offer , as can networking events, dinner parties, social clubs, religious congregations, and volunteering in the community. In the words of Dorothy Day, "We have all known the long loneliness, and we have found that the answer is community. Read thought-provoking books about leadership as well as personal accounts of triumph and success. Many authors possess the gift of connecting with their words and building community through the printed or digital page. Lastly, learn to distinguish between loneliness and solitude. Paul Tillich once said that, "Loneliness expresses the pain of being alone and solitude expresses the glory of being alone. Leaders who can dig deep within themselves for insight and self-encouragement will find the isolated time of solitude to be the most clarifying, purifying, and rewarding time that they have in their busy,
