Knapp's spokesperson is the eponymous Alice K., a year-old single woman who works at Green Goddess, "the magazine for today's enviro-conscious woman." Alice K. covers the usual single-woman beat: sex, dating, men, step classes, bad hair days, therapy and the supreme importance of accessories.

A Love Story an excellent memoir which comes highly recommended by yours truly used to be an author for the Boston Phoenix where she wrote a column documenting the trials and tribulations of Alice K. Many of the interesting points that you may have read about in Drinking are captured in a semi-autobiographical, candid and entertaining manner through the lens of Alice K. It also highlights the zeitgeist of the early s, complete wit Caroline Knapp, author of Drinking: It also highlights the zeitgeist of the early s, complete with fax machines, gigantic computers, big hair, leggings, and bulky sweaters. The World Wide Web did not yet exist, so forget about e-mail, cellphones, voice mail, text messaging, or any of those other conveniences of modern-day life. I remember reading many of these columns in their original incarnation in The Boston Phoenix in the early 90s. Feb 02, Sharon Deeken rated it really liked it Lovely. Adored Caroline Knapp, who was gone too soon, but left an indelible mark on those fortunate enough to discover her and learn so much from this remarkable young woman.

Reminding me slightly of Bridget Jones' Diary, Alice K's Guide to Life was one of the funniest, and most fun to read, books that I've read this year. Alice K (not her real initial) is 30 something, not meeting the right men, in therapy, and completely hysterical.

This is a collection of the columns that she wrote for the Boston Phoenix in the early 90s. This shows in the repetitiveness of the format, with many of the pieces starting with Alice K lying in bed, agonizing over one or other of the aspects of her life. Others are formatted as "open letters" to various people and institutions. The stories, about the travails of Amy Matthes Quirky and fun!
