All Aboard! Minute DB2 Tour Starts Here Being a CIO or CTO is tough these days. Think about it—these executives face challenges that are so wide and varied, it's dizzying and makes you sometimes wonder how anything gets done.

The music was awesome, the local acts were dope and it was just overall an awesome vibe. I thought it was such a huge milestone for Zouk, a Singaporean club, to come in Top 10 amongst massive international super clubs all over the world in the DJ Mag poll. And then huddling round the jug sharing the drink through many straws. It was hard work, we danced three-hour sets, with only minute breaks per hour, but it was a hell lot of fun! Thank you, Zouk, for everything and Happy 25th! Of all my favourites memories at Zouk, it would have to be that one Saturday night at the old Velvet where I was casually waiting for my drink to arrive. Instead, I got proposed to! A year later, we got married! Many of them have been huge influences to me but none more so than DJ Hong and his nights at the old Velvet Underground. I snatched my first win at the Phuture DJ Battle. That was a rather defining moment in my career, especially on my first year of DJing out. Flash your name card and enjoy one-for-one drinks at Wine Bar. I had so much fun dancing to the music — everything was perfect. Sour Plum shots FTW! Can you tell us more about how you work? We usually do all our music videos ourselves. We think about them and then Carlotta edits them. She is the one that knows best what we want, and she does it for free! We design the merch, choose the supporting bands, play and write, deal with the social media, do all the press and mails and design the art of physical releases. Leave Me Alone is making a real splash and the indie world is raving about it. How did the album come together? We wrote LMA between and , when we were back from tours and packing for the next trips, so the result was 12 songs that document what we felt and saw during that whole year. The first songs were more bright and cheerful because we wrote them in summer. But the last songs were written in a rush and in winter, so they happened to be more honest and, probably, sad. And what drew you guys to the lo-fi, garage rock kind of sensibility? It was two things. We just went to our rehearsal room with one mic, one friend that studied sound and a laptop. We loved how you handled it with such a cool swagger especially that adorable handwritten note. Changing our name was such a big deal for us that thinking of keeping something from the old name made us happy. Plus we are women, so being Hinds made sense for us. Some people have criticised Hinds for lacking in technical ability. How would you respond to such detractors? We know what we have and we are fighters. Rock and roll, soldiers!!! And lastly, Barcelona or Real Madrid? Catch Hinds live at Kult Kafe on May How would you describe your touring schedule? Their debut appearance at Laneway Festival The show itself is a bit hazy but it went pretty well. I do remember the festival being absolutely lovely though. We were just coming off an almost two-year-long tour and in that time we experienced so many new things. So I guess there was just a lot to talk and write about and consequently, the album became more personal and self-reflecting. There are no big pop charts to climb or radio stations to get on. None of the politics that kind of control the big music markets are to be found in Iceland. If you write a good song in Iceland, people will hear it. On their cameo appearance on Game Of Thrones. Yes, you should be able to catch a glimpse of us somewhere in the background in this next season of Game of Thrones. We play a travelling band. It was a lovely experience. To you, with love. We look forward to seeing our fans and playing for them and we hope to see as many people as possible at our show! Also, a random fact: My background is actually in classical piano. I started playing when I was six. When I was 12, I took an interest in singing. By age 14, I was playing the guitar and writing my own songs. It was only at 18 that I was assigned to the bass by my lecturer in school. I just felt more musically-inspired playing the bass than the guitar. Beauty For Ashes chronicles a cycle. Making music is my way of transforming negativity into something positive — taking ashes and turning them into beautiful things. A lot of my songs are a result of unpleasant things that I encountered. The album is arranged in a cyclical way: The competition was meant to broaden my horizons. At the same time, I feel like everything being so sterile, methodical and whitewashed has made us complacent and sheltered. I believe that materialism is a luxury, not a prerogative. Alt-rock and jazz inspire her equally. But my songwriting is influenced mainly by bands I listened to when I was younger, like Switchfoot and Anberlin. She wants to help. Music is one of the best ways through which we can all rise up. But we added each other after and met at Music Matters last year. What took so long? We are so glad to be back! I think we played almost four hours the last time and we hope to do that again. Yes, we honestly took our time with it. Everybody had a tight schedule. We were speaking with Tom on Skype and were giving each other feedback on our respective productions, and one thing led to the other. Tom is a great producer! Pretty much the same old thing: The AN21 collab lead to the Steve collab and so on. Everyone brings something different to the table in terms of ideas, sounds and vision. Why are you so drawn to progressive house? I think it was about six years ago, when the scene was a little different. We always wanted to show emotion in our music and I believe now, after all that time, our fans appreciate us for just exactly that. For us, melodies and chords have to be emotional. Progressive house was just the natural platform for us to achieve that and at the same time, take it to dance floors and festival stages. We heard the two of you met on the web. How did that eventually evolve into a professional music partnership? We got along well and things were so much fun and eventually, we landed a record deal with a major label. The rest just progressed naturally. Today, we are so much more than a duo. Does one of you take on particular roles or aspects of the process? You kind of grow into each other. For so long, the Swedish pop scene has commanded global attention. How do you think the Swedish electronic scene is going to develop? The Swedish music scene is very small, but at the same time, we have a lot of global heavyweights within that little scene. Almost everybody is trying to find a new hot sound to progress into and use, perhaps, to separate from the rest. We only release what we believe in. Everything, for this former-band-turned-solo-project of frontman Kip Berman. Mining the same vein as youth-minded gatekeepers like The Smashing Pumpkins and Nirvana, Berman is devoted to making fuzzed-out indie rock with a twee sensibility.

These branch lines, named the Baldwin Branch and Ticonderoga branch, served the steamboat and paper mill industries in and around the Ticonderoga area beginning in the late s until the later part of the twentieth century. Although the freight industry died out by , steamboat travel, as a voluntary tourist excursion method rather than a necessary mode of travel, continues today. This sign was located at the Montcalm Landing crossing. I have been a member of this organization for many years. The Bridge Line Historical Society is a fantastic organization dedicated to preserving the history of the Delaware and Hudson Railroad. If you are interested in the history of the Delaware and Hudson railroad, membership in this organization is a must. Research Hungry for information, I initially searched and searched for a written detailed article or publication on the Ticonderoga Branch of the Delaware and Hudson Railroad. Frankly, I was surprised that no information really existed to any great extent. I also ran across brief bits and casual references to this small branch line in some written forms before any of the books so readily available today were on the market. I finally decided to research the information myself, write an article, and submit it to the Bridge Line Historical Society for publication. I was born and raised in Ticonderoga and loved watching the railroad activity in town, and so, was probably as qualified as anyone else to write an article from my memories and research. This kicked off a lengthy research process beginning with newspaper and book investigations, Library of Congress research, map research, interviews, and acquisition of Ticonderoga memorabilia materials in addition to those I already owned. The research continues and the project is never really done. New Information My continued research includes gathering additional information, photos, post cards, and maps, and updating the information on this web page as the relevant information surfaces. Updates are noted at the top of this web page see View Updates. Visitors to the site and those with stories of the railroad in the Ticonderoga area are welcomed to share their memories on the Tibranch Facebook page. Share your Ticonderoga railroad memories and stories with our Facebook page. Select the Facebook link on the right to go to the Ticonderoga Branch Facebook page. In the railroad business, BLUE FLAG procedures are established to protect railroad workers when they are called on to inspect, test or service railroad rolling equipment. Likewise, blue flag areas may appear on this site and indicate areas of work still under research or not yet complete. The primary goal is to publish as much information as possible rather than wait for a given research effort to complete which could take a year or more. In many cases, research in a specific area leads to new research tasks or topics. Jim Shaughnessy refers to the railroad branch as the Baldwin Branch in his book. The line is also referred to as the Baldwin Branch in much of the Delaware and Hudson literature. A passenger train led by Delaware and Hudson locomotive , a Class D-3 double cab, sits at Fort Ticonderoga station Montcalm Landing just south of the entrance to the Baldwin Branch. The engine was scrapped on March The Lake George Branch terminology was used for years, but was renamed the Baldwin Branch between and Most early Ticonderoga Sentinel newspaper articles published during the construction in and as well as subsequent articles refer to the line as the Lake George road or the Lake Champlain and Lake George railroad or line. These were certainly not official railroad company names, but surely reflect how locals referenced the new line at its inception. A page from an early s book of Delaware and Hudson Canal Company station and siding names seen here on the left clearly denotes the short line into Ticonderoga as the Lake George Branch. The Upper Falls line is also denoted as Weeds. This is confirmed by Delaware and Hudson literature such as timetables, official lists, and other documentation. This line was originally owned by the Ticonderoga Railroad Company. It opened for rail service on May 1, The first steamship "Ticonderoga" traveled along beautiful Lake George carrying passengers from the Fort William Henry Hotel south to the railroad dock at Baldwin near the Village of Ticonderoga from until it burned in The ship was christened by Miss Cora Baldwin, daughter of Capt. The second "Ticonderoga", pictured here, ran along Lake Champlain. Up until , those stagecoach connections between steamboats on Lake George and Lake Champlain were made under the guidance of William J. The Baldwin stages carried passengers making the five-mile trip in about 35 minutes or about twice the time required by the railroad. Date unknown, but the Alco engine was scrapped in October. Samuel de Champlain, the first European visitor to the area, noted the lake in his journal on July 3, 1609, but he did not name it. Isaac Jogues, a Jesuit missionary, was actually the first European to view the lake. Jogues further named its exit stream, La Chute meaning "the fall. The lake lies in a glacial basin consisting of a North and South basin. The average lake depth is 60 feet with a width varying from 0. The lake surface level lies at feet above sea level and encompasses 44 square miles. Lake George drains into Lake Champlain to the north and contains approximately miles of shoreline. Native American names for the lake vary. The Iroquois name for the lake, Caniaderi Guarunte meaning mouth or door of the country; the Algonquin Abenaki name, Petonbowk meaning the lake in between. The mile long lake has a maximum depth of feet with an average lake depth of 64 feet. Its maximum width is 14 miles. Although Lake Champlain is smaller than the Great Lakes, it is a large body of fresh water. Lake Champlain is often referred to as the 6th Great Lake. The Ticonderoga Creek The Ticonderoga Creek now known as the La Chute River with terms used interchangeably was formed during the final stages of the last ice age with the retreat of the Wisconsin glacier some 12, years ago. Lake George and Lake Champlain served as a highway for native people, who carried their canoes along a portage between the lakes. French and British troops and traders found the pathway at Ticonderoga, which had served these Native Americans for thousands of years. In 1852, William J. McAlpine examined the water power beginning at the upper falls outlet of Lake George. In his examination, the reported water power at the head of the upper falls was cubic feet per second. The was presumed to have been before Lake George was controlled by a dam at the outlet. From the lake to the foot of the upper falls; The valley was open and perfectly accessible throughout the length of the falls. The water was very clear and soft, therefore well suited to use in paper manufacturing. The lower Ti creek now the La Chute River. Notice the wooden trestle leading into the mill. Earlier in the century, the woodlot area was part of the creek and sailing ships traversed up the river. This area was eventually filled in as seen in this photo. The woodlot was also moved to the other side of the mill. Ticonderoga Historical Society, M. Wright collection Descending from the lake, the water privileges in were, in order, as follows: The fall was 18 feet. On the right bank was a small saw mill with 50 horse-power of wheels, and a new paper mill. The race was continued by an open wooden flume six or seven feet wide and feet long. The company owned about 75 feet of fall and half the flow of the creek. The head actually utilized was 68 feet, under which two Swain turbines of aggregate horse-power were run, two wheels acting upon a vertical shaft. Only or horse-power was in active use. The company employed people, ran 10, spindles and looms, and manufactured fine sheetings, producing 55, yards per week. The other half of the privilege could be improved. It was owned by the American Graphite Company, which also had works at the lower falls. The Town of Ticonderoga Ticonderoga, comprising an area of approximately 88 square miles, was settled in and is located within the southeastern corner of the Adirondack Mountains, miles north of Albany, NY, and miles south of Montreal in Quebec, Canada. New York State Routes 22 and 74 access the community. The town celebrated its th birthday in Ticonderoga bicentennial logo M. Wright collection Although many are familiar with the famous yellow pencils bearing the "Ticonderoga" name, these pencils were never actually made in Ticonderoga. The graphite for these pencils was mined in the local area and refined at the American Graphite Company mill in Ticonderoga. However, the pencils themselves were never produced in the town to bear their name. Different Settlements Ticonderoga developed as several individual settlement areas, each of which had a specific name associated with it. South Ticonderoga, also known as Trout Brook, became known as Tuffertown supposedly because of the efforts early residents had to endure or tough it out in order to exist. The Upper village was known as Alexandria while the Lower Village never really earned a name. Alexandria, was one of the two largest population centers to form and was an early industrial and commercial center. It was linked to the lower village, the other major population center, by the Portage. The western portion of the village became Weedville and the high hill to the north was Mount Hope. Another settlement area at the foot of the mountainous area approximately three miles north of the lower village was known as Ti Street or Streetroad. The upper falls area and Weedville filed for annexation by the Village of Ticonderoga in The hamlet of Ticonderoga was incorporated as a village within the Town of Ticonderoga on May 18, Dissolution petitions were presented to the Village in . The vote to dissolve the village passed in March approving disincorporation and the Village of Ticonderoga officially dissolved at midnight on December 31, This ended years of an independent Village of Ticonderoga. The Town of Ticonderoga assumed control of most of the Village equipment, functions, as well as 17 employees on January 1,

The pick-up was on time, and we arrived well in Chalong where we checked in, got the wristband for the trip booked yellow in my case and a lifehack. Then a lot of waiting while they showed videos of Nikorn trips. From the beginning I did not like the guide my group got. She was very the rulebook type, always telling us in a strict tone what to do and what not to do. Nothing personal, no jokes, nothing that created a nice atmosphere. The boat was very new and extremely fast - it felt like no time passes at all when we reached our first destination, Racha beach. Here, it was not only me who got a bit irritated when the guide told us, snorkelling would be at What if we wanted to snorkel right now, the beach was pretty crowded, but the crystal-clear water looked extremely tempting. I really, really regretted not bringing my swimming goggles, but pardon me for thinking I would not need them on a snorkelling trip. The beach offered next to no shade. They will start to feel ripped off After having patiently waited for And this I have to say with next to no snorkelling experience from before was absolutely amazing. I enjoyed floating just below the waterline thanks to the life jackets and watch all the fish life happening under me, beside me, around me. There was really a lot to see and it was just beautiful. We got one full hour there which I found sufficient, though I could have stayed there much longer, too. Each time when we came back to the boat, we were offered cold drinks Sprite, Coke, Next stop was at Coral Island which felt even more crowded than Racha tons of Chinese tourists, new boats arriving by the minute, but again the beautiful beach and see-through water made up for that. After we have left the boat, I asked the guide whether there would be a snorkelling like at Racha. You can use the masks from the boat, but if you drop it, 1. Lunch I have to say was not very enjoyable for me as I was not able to find any no-meat-options at the buffet not even fish. So it was rice and watermelon for me. Everything at the stands here was ridiculously overpriced - fruit shakes for Baht, roti pancakes for Baht! Swimming at the beach was quite nice, but again I missed my goggles. Several other activities like parasailing, seawalking, banana boat were offered, but also at a high price. The Nikorn guide really needs to loosen up to make it more enjoyable for the paying! As I experienced the trip today, I can honestly not recommend it.

Northshire Bookstore was established in by Ed and Barbara Morrow after they moved here from Westchester with their two young sons, Chris and Andy. They knew they were ready for a change so they left their jobs, and decided to embark upon their passion of owning their own bookstore. Once open the Manchester community quickly embraced their new bookstore, making it a popular destination for area book lovers. Just one year later in , the Morrrows decided they needed more hands on deck and hired five staff members. This, coupled with the fact that they had no space for back stock gradually led to an ever decreasing living space for the Morrow family. In , the old Coburn House which had been sitting unoccupied for nearly 2 years, went up for auction and Ed and Barbara agreed to buy it. In , Northshire Bookstore reopened in the newly renovated Colburn House space allowing for a more spacious store and living space. A short number of years after this move, the retail industry began rapidly changing with the explosion of malls across the U. It was also at this time that Chris Morrow had returned home after studying overseas. Having made the decision to eventually take over the family business, Chris and his parents chose, once again, to expand the bookstore. In addition to a great assortment of books and gifts available the Northshire Bookstore also hosts several author events. We have been extremely fortunate in being able to bring a wide range of nationally known authors, as well as “ just as importantly “ Vermont authors to share their work and experience, as writers. He was incredibly generous in connecting with his audience, and that also made him such a great teacher. And there have been hundreds of others. How many pursuits can be viewed as both vocation and avocation, being fed not only by passion, but also contributing to the enrichment of the mind. The only requirement for citizenship in this community is a love of books. We have become what we are because of the people who have chosen to make us part of their community over the years, and for that we are very grateful. We are the meeting place for people coming to town. A bulletin board in our entryway is for posters announcing community events. The room is constantly booked with everyone from the local day care fundraising committee, to public speaking classes, to many writing groups. Local theatres hold pre-performance discussions in the Northshire Bookstore. Through it, we offer the community enriching experiences well beyond inspired author appearances. Additionally, we have been community leaders for decades “that, too, is part of the winning prescription for an independent bookstore, making Northshire Bookstore a cornerstone of the community, for residents and visitors alike. A brick forged in magical kilns. They are called books. But we mean books in the codex format, ink on paper. For, while the essence of a book is intangible “a captured set of ideas and creativity of an author blending with the creative interpretation inspired in its reader “the means of its transmission is increasingly being recognized as critically important. It is my belief that our community instinctively recognizes this and will support the Northshire through another 40 years “which we hope may be curated by our granddaughters. Bookstores tend to be owned and staffed by people who care about the quality of their daily lives, about the social setting in which they work, and about how they can have a positive effect on the cultural fabric of their community. Irrepressible, old-dog bookseller David Schwartz said it best. By creating a unique and inviting space, by filling it with well-chosen titles, and by having excellent booksellers, the right books land in the right set of hands at the right time. All of our efforts revolve around this simple aspiration of creating magic. So thank you to all the folks in Manchester and the Mountains, to our fellow booksellers, to publishers, to authors and to readers across the globe.
