Plot[ edit ] The Adventures of Teddy Ruxpin follows young Teddy Ruxpin as he leaves his home on the island of Rillonia with his best friend Grubby to follow an ancient map which leads him to find a collection of crystals on the mainland of Grundo. With the help of his new friend Dr. Newton Gimmick, Teddy and Grubby discover the magical powers of what turns out to be an ancestral treasure as well as an organization with ambitions to use it for evil known as M. Along the way, Teddy learns the long-lost history of his species and clues to the location of his missing father. The series followed a prior attempt to produce a live-action series which had proved too difficult and expensive. Atkinson was in charge of the principal animation and casting. Of the previous voice actors associated with the Teddy Ruxpin property, only Phil Baron Teddy and Will Ryan Grubby traveled to Canada to remain part of the cast; most other characters were re-cast with local Canadian voice talent. Interest remains among the owners of the Teddy Ruxpin property and the fanbase to continue the story originated in the animated series, which ended its 65 episode run in somewhat of a cliffhanger. Main characters[ edit ] The three main protagonists, often referred to collectively in fandom as The Trio: Teddy Ruxpin voiced by Phil Baron: The protagonist of the series. He is a young Illiop roughly 15 whose father disappeared when he was a child. He comes to Grundo to follow a treasure map. Like other Illiops, he is kind and friendly. He loves adventure, meeting new faces, and having new experiences. Grubby voiced by Will Ryan: They are best friends. Noted for his large appetite, he is fond of cooking and eating root stew and other foods made from roots which usually do not taste good to non-Octopedes. Newton Gimmick voiced by John Stocker: A bald Perloon inventor with a severe stuttering problem and a broad and otherwise questionable definition of "science". He is also somewhat absent-minded. He is usually referred to simply as Gimmick. Allies[ edit ] Prince Arin voiced by Robert Bockstael: The brave Illiper son of the king and queen of Grundo. He lives at Grundo Castle and speaks with a British-sounding accent. He first met the heroic trio while searching for his kidnapped sister. Princess Aruzia voiced by Abby Hagyard: Though a princess, she does not mind doing work. Wooly apparently has a crush on her. The Wooly Whatsit voiced by Pier Kohl: A large furry purple creature who is not very bright, but very helpful and good-hearted. Later revealed to possibly be a Snowzo, a legendary yeti -like species. He is usually referred to simply as Wooly. Leota voiced by Holly Larocque: A strict but kind Woodsprite and schoolteacher. Most of her students are elves and woodsprites, but Wooly joined the class as well. Burl Ruxpin voiced by Phil Baron: An Illiop who lost his memory a long time ago, but regained his identity toward the end of the series. Villains[ edit ] There are three main antagonists: Tweeg voiced by John Koensgen: He is very suspicious and often spies on Gimmick from his tower. He is usually referred to as simply Tweeg. Tweeg has desperately wanted to join M. Short for Lead Bounder, L. The Supreme Oppressor of M. He is the main antagonist of the series who sees Illiops as an enemy to his master plan of regaining all six crystals to the one he has in The Black Box. With them, his darkness will reign supremely over the land of Grundo. The Adventures of Teddy Ruxpin features a large menagerie of sentient species for its character base: Brown and bear -like creatures, with kind dispositions. The first pair are employed as hands, while the rest are used for walking. Are often culturally nocturnal , but have no trouble with a diurnal lifestyle. Humans who usually are professional in nature e. The near-relatives to humans but broad-faced with flat noses, who live in a medieval type society. In ancient times, they shared a close association with the civilization of the Illiops. Relatives of the Illipers but jungle-dwellers with antennae in lieu of ears, who tend to be passionate about their hobbies. There are two distinct cultures: Small, furry, multicolored and penguin -like creatures, sometimes kept as pets. Tiny humanoids with pointy ears and shoes. Share a common culture with the Woodsprites. Tiny humanoids with butterfly-like wings. Share a common culture with the Elves. A race of large, white and yeti -like creatures who look more dangerous than they are. Prefer very cold temperatures. A race of red, round, two-legged creatures with a rhinoceros -like horn on top of their heads, usually sarcastic. They are said by some viewers to resemble Ripto from the Spyro the Dragon series. A race of large and lumpy animated blobs of mud, dull witted and slow moving but very strong. Sensitive to bright light, since all of their lives are spent underground. Green and monkey -like creatures who wear brown tribal owl -like armor, usually belligerent. Small shy creatures able to change into other objects, i. They use their ability to hide. They were previously called Nothings. Protect Yourself[ edit ] Due to the partnership between Worlds of Wonder and the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children , when the series was originally syndicated, each episode included a short segment called "Protect Yourself" which ran after a teaser for the next episode and prior to the credits. The guest would then give young viewers advice on topics such as avoiding strangers, what to do in an emergency, how to respond to inappropriate touching, or running away. A common theme was to talk to a trusted grown up for help.

The product was one of the hottest if not the hottest Christmas items of the year - Think Tickle Me Elmo scale popularity. Teddy was the ultimate storytelling bear, and the best friend of many a young child. The toy featured a built in cassette tape player on its back which could be utilized with the dozens of story cassettes and read along books Worlds of Wonders released during its five year run. Throughout its years of release, Teddy Ruxpin saw three generations of stuffed bears - Each with its own unique upgrades and changes. The first generation featured a metal tape deck. While durable made the toy somewhat heavy for children - It also proved rather expensive for production. The second generation did away with the metal tape deck in favor of an all plastic one. This ensured that if the bear was left on with no tape playing the batteries were not drained dead. The third, and final generation of bears featured the most update. To bring the world of Teddy Ruxpin alive, Worlds of Wonders created numerous clothing sets which you could change your bear into. There were seven standard ones as well as four deluxe editions. The standard clothing - Or Adventure Outfits as they were called featured high quality stitching, and combination of plastic and cloth. And a much higher price tag. While Teddy Ruxpin was a fantastic "stuffed" bear all on its own, it was the cassettes which really made the toy come alive. Worlds of Wonders made sure to keep parents shopping with release after release. The stories were a combination of fun themes, exciting adventures and sometimes even safety lessons for children. Because each cassette also featured a read along storybook to coincide with them, kids also had the opportunity to learn and practice reading making Teddy Ruxpin an easy advertisement to parents as a learning toy. The case could hold up to six cassette tapes, and six books. Granted, this would mean you would need about seven cases to store the entire collection. However, we can attest this does look rather nice sitting on a bookshelf next to your Teddy Ruxpin doll. For parents who were big into their children focusing their attention strictly on educational toys, Teddy Ruxpin featured a great add on accessory - Answer Box. Simply plug in the device to your Teddy, and insert one of the unique question and answer tapes. Each one featured a series of multiple choice questions, which when used in conjunction with the corresponding book you could pick the answer using the color coded buttons. Worlds of Wonders made sure to create and incorporate numerous characters in not only the stories, but in the toy line. Grubby Additionally, Grubby is also the only other toy in the line who received his own Adventure Outfits - Granted, it was only two as compared to the dozen which Teddy had. Below are some of our favorites. The Teddy Ruxpin Electronic Phone was so cool back in the day. It featured pre-recorded phone conversations which your child could have with Teddy. Additionally, when you talked, he would actually respond to you with things such as, "Uh-huh" to make it appear as if he was really listening and speaking with you. The doll still had some "hard" components to it though as with the use of batteries it could open its mouth, and blink its eyes. Baby Teddy Ruxpin Not into babies? Want something even softer? Talking Bear from Pioneer Toys. Why the two "Talking"? Moving on from confusing packaging. The bear also included a tape deck feature - Unfortunately with not as many stories to choose from. Of course one could always just use official Teddy Ruxpin tapes with it. When Worlds of Wonder closed their doors in the license shifted to Playskool until Under the Playskool banner, the bear was upgraded to remove the cassette player, and instead used a cartridge which more so resembled an 8-track tape. Entertainment brought the toy back to store shelves in , and with it reverted back to the original design of Worlds of Wonder - I. This was short lived as Yes! Teddy was brought back again in by BackPack. This all new version now incorporated digital cartridges in place of the audio cassettes. Though it was discontinued, this version can still be found via numerous online retail chains. In , Wicked Cool Toys announced and released a fifth iteration of Teddy. This time it did away with all forms of physical media, and instead came with three pre-loaded stories. Click " HERE " to go back to the home page. Large page, please be patient as it loads. This guide has been assembled to help novice and more advanced collectors and fans make a good purchase of a Teddy Ruxpin. It outlines in brief what you need to look for and how to look for it. Click the red boxes for pictures or links. A small pack that attaches to your belt is a good way to carry these items. The rationale for them is to test run the Teddy Ruxpin before you buy it. When inserting the batteries make certain to inspect the battery compartment. Also make sure you have a battery cover. Next when you insert the tape, check the condition of the tape player cover. The bottom edges Right and left more corners of the tape player housing tend to crack easily. These edge cracks do not affect anything other than appearance. When you have the batteries and tape installed, gently turn the switch thumb wheel on his back, note how well it works. It should not feel loose and should operate fairly smoothly. The audio should be easily controlled using the thumbwheel. Sudden jumps or changes in the sound level indicate a possible problem. When you have him up and running watch his mouth and eyes. D , and his eyes will move. Check out these pages to learn more about the mechanical animation. These items should also operate fairly smoothly. While the motors are pulsed to make fine movements, there is such a large gear reduction that this should not be noticeable. Large mechanical shuttering Different than an eye flutter or visible cracks on the surface of the eyes bode for possible physical damage internally. The diminutive motors and gearbox assemblies are lubricated with grease. This grease given time tends to migrate to the brushes and commutator, cutting off electrical contact and the stopping the motor. Working the eyes or muzzle carefully back and fourth sometimes may move the commutator enough for it to make contact again. Other problems are a loose jaw caused by a break in the jaw pin support, this causes the jaw to not animate properly. Or the rare blunt force trauma which cracks the internal frame that contains the animation mechanism. Now lets examine the rest of him. The ear tips and muzzle seem to take the brunt of the wear and tear, and they get both dirty and worn. The ear tips typically wear down to the fur backing, while the muzzle loses its light creme colour. Cleaning is fairly easy, but you rarely end up with like new fur. Also give his fur a good sniff. Careful he may be dusty! Remember, any cigarette smell means once you get him home he may smell up the room you put him in. Examine how well limbs and neck are attached. It should seem attached by more than just the material and plush. Identifying when the doll was made is tougher. Despite what you may think, the date molded into the plastic back is not when he was made. Every Teddy Ruxpin will have something like, Inside the battery compartment you can sometimes find a tag that will have a numerical date such as my oldest Teddy Ruxpin: EP I assume this is read 50th day of Putting a value on a Teddy Ruxpin is tricky at best. Worlds Of Wonder sold millions of them The original full size versions which means there still are a lot of them out there. They were also fairly well built, which means many of them still are working, and the ones that are not functioning can actually be repaired. The variation in values is based on my personal experience and others. This is strictly for comparison use and is in not in any way a guarantee that you will get or find these same prices. The high and low variation represent prices that either I Or others have personally seen. In general the higher end is the more unusual value to see. Mint condition, in box, all full size variations. Lullabies tapes 1 and 2, and TR sings love songs are on the high end. Grubby in mint condition, in box. Well, when it comes to artwork something that exists in less than copies. With Teddy Ruxpin the rarity will only happen with time since there were millions of them made. What is a antique? Something that is 20 years old or more. What has been traditionally been needed for an item to be considered a collectable? Additionally if the manufacturer is no longer in business. In the case of Teddy Ruxpin only two items of those three is currently met.

But in Forsse's mind, Teddy wasn't an actual bear—he was an Illiop, a species native to his fantasy world of Grundu, that just happened to look remarkably like a carnivore.

The strange story of his creation touches on Disneyland, Atari -- even Chuck E. After 30 years in a cramped storage garage near Los Angeles, his brown eyes no longer blink. But with a click of the volume wheel on his back, his snout comes to life. He sings his famous opening line: Teddy was a bulky toy. The same magnetic strip that played the audio also delivered the commands telling Teddy to move his eyes and mouth in sync with his narration. As kids flipped through picture books, Teddy read from one of his 60 story tapes he could speak 13 languages. Teddy had a live-action movie and a cartoon TV series. There were Teddy bed sheets. Teddy remained a best-seller -- until the magic ran out in . After a long hibernation, the talking bear is returning for the holiday season, and with an updated look: LCD screen eyes, push-button paws and a Bluetooth-connected app. Teddy has gone through a few evolutions over the years. Forsse died in . As with any good fantasy, the universe he created was a land of magical kingdoms, creatures and crystals -- a bit like "Lord of the Rings" but with more fuzz. Teddy Ruxpin comes from a rich fantasy universe -- a bit like Lord of the Rings, but with more fuzz. He was born on the southern island of Rilonia. The year-old-bear is best buds with an oversized, eight-legged orange bug-like creature called Grubby. Together they befriend bumbling inventor, Newton Gimmick, and dodge the evil schemes of the inept wannabe-wizard Tweeg. Forsse left Disney to start his Alchemy company. Pufnstuf," and consulting for a startup, then called Chuck E. Jim Henson visited, but had no immediate use for the tech. But then Forsse made a deal with the royalty of the toy world. Teddy was just a stuffed bear head on a stick tethered to motors and a cassette tape player, but the crude prototype was enough to charm Kingsborough. And I loved Ken Forsse. He was such a kind and gentle soul, an extraordinarily creative person. Teddy went from a head on a stick to store shelves in six months. His theme song for the Horizons ride will forever be in my brain. Wilkins, now 83, says one song is particularly unforgettable. A year into the project, Alchemy received a letter from a young girl dying of leukemia who requested the Teddy lullaby, " Will you go to sleep before I do? Decades later, I got goosebumps hearing my childhood toy speak to me over the phone. A slow pace helped puppeteer Thom Fountain. Fountain, a self-described Pac-Man fanatic, says the joystick was his electronic paintbrush. His movements were recorded onto a large spool of magnetic tape. His experience with Teddy led him to puppeteer a more sinister toy: The voice of the fairy Leota is also the voice of Minnie Mouse. I just thought it was magical I had a gut feeling that you could make this into something. But although they worked fast, they kept a playful spirit -- even hiring storytellers to gather staff around fake campfires, sparking new ideas. It became the North American distributor for Nintendo and it created the first Lazer Tag -- another hot holiday toy. A tragic incident halted the momentum. Worlds of Wonder staggered under the bad press. Later that same year, Nintendo ended its partnership with the company, followed by the largest stock market crash in history that October. At the same time, toymakers were capitalizing on the Teddy craze by flooding stores with talking dolls. Alchemy tried to resurrect Teddy. Three companies bought the license and put him on shelves, but he never lasted. Now another toy company is trying a new approach. The nostalgia factor adds new hope: Message boards keep the world fresh with fan fiction. Old cartoons and songs live on YouTube. The designers at Wicked Cool Toys explored a few different prototypes before finding the right look for Teddy. His plastic eyes are now LCD screens. He comes with a sleep mask for that very reason. He no longer wears his original vest and red shorts. The Alchemy team believes in the new look. Kids will find his new threads more relatable, and the designers say blue eyes pop better as animations on his LCD screens. Josh Isaacson, who runs the superfan site TeddyRuxpinOnline. The same fans who debate over electronic eyes also debate whether his friend Grubby is a mammal or an insect. The Wicked Cool Toys team says it has written back to a small number of distressed fans who reached out. Teddy sold out on several early-morning QVC spots in July. Ruxpin his first success. Furbys that play viral videos, Hatchimals that sing and FurReal Friends dragons that blow smoke. What will it take for Teddy to really make it? with them, Grubby and other characters could make it onto shelves, too -- possibly expanding on the story Forsse never finished. Then super fans can find out what happens to Teddy, and if he can stop Quellor from destroying Grundo with the seven crystals.

Entertainment, the newest venture of Worlds of Wonder founder Don Kingsborough. It was a device that would pair with Teddy to animate his commentary on video compilations of The Adventures of Teddy Ruxpin, using the same technology as TV Teddy. New audio was recorded by Phil Baron for the project. TeddyIII returned to the traditional cassette tapes used by the original, as opposed to the cartridges Playskool had utilized. These cassette tapes are not cross-compatible with the WOW version. TeddyIII was bundled with a small beanie-baby Teddy, capitalizing on the toy craze of the time. TeddyIII was also equipped with a "safety" that made it hard for even older children to change cassettes. A small switch had to manually be held and a handle opened simultaneously to gain access to the tape deck. Presumably, this was done so smaller children would not cause damage to the deck or endanger themselves with unwound audio tape. Worlds of Wonder executives had never been happy with the color scheme and tunic of the original Teddy, and many of them were making decisions again at Yes!. It was decided early that Teddy would be dressed in primary colors. The storybook art was also edited to feature the red shirt and blue "jeans". TeddyIII hit the market in time for Christmas. A "Computer Pack" was advertised as a coming-soon feature, and supposedly would have had Teddy interact with online content. Phil Baron recalls recording for the project, but it never saw a release and no copies are known to exist. TeddyIII was hard to find. No major general merchandise stores carried the product. Toys R Us and KB Toys heavily discounted Teddy almost immediately, and collectors often scooped up large quantities in a single visit. There were reports of Teddy not operating at all, of the tape deck operating wildly with correlating audio problems, and of poor sound quality in general. Entertainment was also coming apart at the seams. Similarly to WOW, they had saturated categories and too much capital had went to the wrong places. The product line was quickly liquidated and Teddy would be without a manufacturer for seven years, until a startup called Backpack Toys introduced TeddyIV in . TeddyIII was welcomed warmly by a fanbase grasping for news of a return in the late s. Calls and emails to the company would result in a person hearing information the company thought they wanted to hear. A new TV series was even promised, although a new show had never even been pitched. The pack will not function without TeddyIII, and will not work with any other version. While other versions of the animated toy have a generally accepted price range in this condition, a Yes! TeddyIII has a nostalgic following that only the original version overshadows. Many fans who grew up with this version now want to pass it on, or own a working one again. Because repairing these is nearly impossible, we advise frugality even when purchasing one that is proven to be operational. As noted in our summary, the version tends to continue to work as a tape player even when the animation functions cease. As always, verify that any item you purchase has been tested.

She was one of dozens of adults crammed into the store in late , all of them searching for signs of an animatronic plush doll named Teddy Ruxpin. The shelves were empty. Brady spun to face her attacker, a small child armed with a shopping cart who was veering in the other direction. She collected her 1-year-old son, who had been knocked over in the melee, and headed for another toy store. Between and , this scene and others like it played out in stores around the country. It was a narrative he hoped would continue indefinitely. There would be no talking his way out of bankruptcy proceedings. Old Robots Born in , Forsse grew up in Burbank, California, using his free time to build furniture and toys or take lessons in painting from his sister. Fresh out of high school, he snagged a job in the mail room of Walt Disney Studios before making his way to their animation department. In , he was drafted into the Army. By the time he formed his own company, Alchemy II, in , he had settled on the more familiar teddy bear. As late as , the puppets Forsse constructed for Disney had radio-controlled heads, and his early Teddy prototype was similar: It had two parts, with one piece controlling the face via FM radio signals. It was complicated, bulky, and absent of any charm. Fisher-Price passed; so did HBO, which Forsse had hoped would consider a live-action series based on the premise. Finally, Forsse and his Alchemy II partners stumbled upon a more practical effect: The result would be movement synchronized to the speech. When Worlds of Wonder president Don Kingsborough had a prototype Teddy placed in his lap, he agreed to manufacture the doll under a royalty agreement. The Christmas season would reveal whether it was a smart investment or if Alchemy should have stuck with the monkey. When Teddy Ruxpin went on sale in September , Worlds of Wonder sold through a staggering 41, units in 30 days. Teddy was the toy version of disposable razor cartridges, except the bear itself was no loss leader: Like all toy fads, however, they were largely powerless against the pleas of their children. By early , more than a million Teddys had been sold, all of them cheerfully babbling away. Most of them, anyway. After the holiday, some 35, bears were returned to Worlds of Wonder owing to defective operation. The company argued it was operator error in some cases. The manual urged users not to poke Teddy with scissors or other sharp objects, nor was he to be submerged in a bath. Worlds of Wonder chartered jumbo jets from China, Taiwan, and Hong Kong stuffed with Teddys in an attempt to meet demand. It was never enough. By , more than 1. According to the Los Angeles Times, it involved allegations that Worlds of Wonder was slow to ship inventory and failed to throttle back before the market was saturated in talking animals. By , Teddy was in hibernation. In , Alchemy II entered into a new licensing agreement, this time with Hasbro, to reissue Teddy; over the next two decades, the license bumped around to different manufacturers. In , a 20th anniversary edition was released , and in February , Wicked Cool Toys announced plans to reinvigorate Teddy with a brand new global line of toys and other merchandise beginning in fall Their sales will cap the 8 million Ruxpins that have been sold since Whether tech-savvy kids will be as captivated by Teddy as they were in the mids remains to be seen. If they are, that amusement might be short-lived. When a bruised Mary Brady presented her daughter, Valerie, with a Teddy Ruxpin in , it happened to be one of the defective models that needed to be returned to Grundo. She was going to drive me crazy until she got that stupid bear.

And Teddy replied, " You can call me an Illiop or you can call me a bear. I really don't care, as long as you call me your friend". And, you're half right, Teddy explained to Grubby that a Koala is a Marsupial, rather than an actual bear.

Worlds of Wonders made their Teddy Ruxpin bear mainly from to They all took 4 C type batteries on look similar even through there were modifications made to them internally and to a lesser degree externally. All of these Teddy Ruxpin bears were compatible with the accessory items put out at intervals by Worlds of Wonder. They were the answer box, the projector and the Grubby toy. These are all run through the Teddy output on the back of Teddy under the battery door. All these accessories including Grubby will not work without a working Teddy Ruxpin. The projector will show the slides but there will be no story without Teddy. After Teddy Ruxpin was released, it became apparent that Teddy was prone to various conditions causing him to fall into a coma and not work. Worlds of Wonder was soon swamped with Teddy Ruxpin repairs in their Grundo hospital. Unfortunately, the target age for this toy was not an age when I child can handle a delicate electronic toy without breaking it. By the time Grubby came out a year after Teddy, parents had already spent alot of money keeping Teddy going. The batteries that go in Grubby actually will only power Grubby when signals come from Teddy. Parents became somewhat disillusioned with the toys and WOW started failing financially. In , Playskool took over Teddy Ruxpin production. Some of the early ones produced still had WOW patents listed on the boxes and tags leading to confusion over which Teddy you have and who made it. The Playskoll versions were smaller. The vest is sewn in place instead of being separate like the first Teddy. Although they used the same stories, they were on a small cartridge instead of a cassette tape. The books that accompanied these "cartridges" tended to be paperbacks instead of hardcover like the original Teddy cassette tape books. The Playskool bears do not work with anything accessory items and do not connect to Grubby. Their insides are totally different from WOW bears and not easy to fix. The cartridge player in the back had no door on it and quickly got so dirty that it no longer worked. The facial features were all connected by pulley belts that stretched and slipped. Needless to say these were not made long and never really caught on even though there is quite a few of these are still around, most of them inoperable. These were marketed to be able to work with your computer and with a VHS tape where Teddy talked with the Video tape. The video ability was operated with an "optional" video pack. I am not sure how well they actually worked with a computer in None of the clothes are removable, in fact all the clothes available for Teddy Ruxpin were designed to fit the original WOW bears. In Backpack toys released the digital version of Teddy Ruxpin that is completely digitally. It is a small bear about the size of the Playskool and Yes Entertainment bear. Like the other post Worlds of wonder releases, it never captures the look or magic of the original Teddy Ruxpin and Grubby.
