stars. When Janet is offered a job of editing children's books for a publishing company, her life changes; and this is the story of those changes and of the people she meets along the way.

Dwight David Eisenhower was president of the United States, Nikita Krushchev was the Premier of the Soviet Union, the USSR was performing nuclear tests every time you turned around, and America was dealing not only with its fear of communism and war, but with serious racial issues. America was facing its challenges, not only from outside, but from inside as well. On the other hand, it was still a simpler and more innocent time. Eight of the top ten shows were westerns, led by Gunsmoke and Wagon Train. Baby boomers were still popping up everywhere. So was a beautiful little girl named Janet Ives. Janet was born in Memphis, Tennessee and was diagnosed early on with cerebral palsy, which in turn would bring a life of problems with movement and posture, problems with vision and speech, and intellectual disability. So, that was it. No bright future for Janet. No relationships with friends like herself. Nothing to look forward to except a lifetime of isolation, of being different, and the eventual challenges of aging prematurely from the stress and strain CP causes on the body and its organ systems. But one thing the world has always had is fiercely protective mothers who do not accept that the world does not care to make a place for their children. Janet was eleven years old, and needed turning and a lot of exercise – neighbors came in to help every day. Janet went to the Dallas Academy, where she learned to swim from instructors who were members of the SMU swim team. Mainstreaming, in the context of education, is the practice of educating students with special needs in regular classes during specific time periods based on their skills. This means regular education classes are combined with special education classes. For that to happen, there have to be special education classes. Wilson had no special education classes – until Doris called and wrote letters to everyone from school officials to the school board to a state Senator. Even though the school was just around the corner, other kids were allowed the ride the bus, and Doris was not going to allow Janet to miss out on that. So the calls began again, and by now the world knew not to bother resisting. High School was moving along and the future was approaching fast. She was going to have a place she could call home. She was going to have fun things to do, and friends to do them with. She was going to have a job. John and Doris literally traveled around the country looking for the right opportunity for Janet, traveling as far as New York, before deciding Home of Hope could offer everything Janet needed to have the rich and fulfilling life they wanted for her. Janet graduated from Williams High School in May, Her mother became an R. Janet enjoys watching movies, listening to music, and shopping for clothes. She also likes to go out to eat she likes steak. She talks about her family constantly, and flies home regularly to spend Thanksgiving, Christmas, Easter, and the 4th of July with her family. They drive up to see her in between. She spends her own money on clothes, and likes that she earns her own paycheck. She thinks in terms of her everyday life.

This classic car and the matching vintage trailer were so cute. We spent a week on the Oregon Coast and while we were there, we drove up to the Tillamook Air Museum. It was very interesting. We also saw several older fighter jets as well. After leaving the coast, we came up to Ridgefield. We had a great dinner with my sister and her husband. So good to see them. Ben drove us yes " Ben is driving now up to the Mt. Remarkable visitors center " but " with all of the smoke there was nothing out the window to see. One day, we took a short hike up the Lewis river to Lucia Falls. The river area and falls were beautiful. It was like College of the Desert on steroids. We took MAX over to our very favorite! The weather in the Portland area has been warm this summer But the smoke has been terrible. We are so glad the fires are getting under control and the smoke is clearing out. We started July with two wonderful weeks with great friends in Chimacum Washington. Chimacum is located just a short distance from Port Townsend on Puget Sound. We thought this was so cool. They strapped up this boat out of the water and drove it off for repairs. We stayed near our friends, John and Bonnie Kearsing. Kayaking was so much fun. We took the kayaks out three different times. One day we took a ferry over to Seattle and went to Pike Street Market Beautiful fresh veggies at the market We had lunch down on the waterfront. One of several wonderful dinners out. One day we drove up to Hurricane Ridge. I was so impressed. It was amazing! so beautiful. Next we drove to Sherwood Oregon just two days before Marc and Maria along with their kids were taking off for 17 days in Europe. Amazing vacation for them. While out kayaking the river, Anna was showing us her gymnastics routine. How does she do it? July has been a great month! June 1st we headed from Indio toward the Portland area! Lake Shasta is full of water awaiting the summer boaters!. Camryn has graduated from Sherwood High School. It is so gorgeous. While the guys played golf, us girls rented kayaks And floated the Deschutes. We had such a great time Next stop!. A week here with absolutely gorgeous weather. One day we took a trip to the Tillamook Cheese Factory. A great tour of their new visitors center. We took a 5 mile hike to Cape Lookout. The trail was beautiful Looks like a postcard. Another day, we kayaked in D Lake in Lincoln City. Yet another day, we drove south along the coast We saw so many whales along the shoreline. They were breaching and flapping their tails. June has been a really fun month!. July, we will be heading up toward Port Townsend.

Malham Cove is a very popular place for tourists to visit. On a sunny Bank Holiday weekend, we saw plenty of people walking in trainers and lots of families at Malham Cove itself. Can I Do This Walk? This walk took us around 3 hours to complete, at a fairly easy pace and with a good half hour stop for a picnic lunch. There are some gentle hills to walk up and some steep steps to descend at the finish. I would recommend wearing sturdy, comfortable footwear. At one point we got stuck behind a milk van and at another we had to literally drive around a turkey who decided to just stand in the middle of the road. On our visit, a field across from the center was converted into a car park. Please remember to bring some cash! Cross it and double back towards the car park. Follow the path along, go through the gate and turn left. Do remember to take note of any special instructions attached to the signposts you see. Our visit was during lambing season, so there were reminders to keep dogs on leads and ensure gates closed. The smell is wonderful! Assuming you like garlic, that is! The path here becomes uneven and rocky. Foss is the old Scandinavian word for waterfall or force. Legend tells us Janet or Jennet, queen of the local fairies, lived in a cave behind the waterfall. National Trust After spending some time enjoying the waterfall, take the path upwards on the left hand side. This will lead you out onto a road. The gorge was produced by water from melting glaciers sometime over the last three million years Malhamdale. Keep on going until you reach the sign now on your right for Malham Cove. It may be slightly obscured by a refreshment van which is as good a reason as any to stop for an ice cream. Ice cream in hand, make your way through the gate and into the fields. Turn to your left and follow the path along. Make sure to stop once in a while and enjoy the view! Cross it and take a few steps to the right. Really though, Malham Cove is pretty difficult to miss. At the top there is a remarkable limestone pavement with its clints small flat blocks and grikes deep crevices between, and a sensational view over the valley. Whilst it mostly goes without saying, I will say it anyway: Be careful with your footing. The limestone rocks are very sturdy in general, but the gaps between the stones are deep. There is a grassy path to the right hand side which would allow you to skip pretending to be a mountain goat. Some of these steps are narrow and the stones smoothed from thousands of footsteps clambering all over them. They can be slippery! At the bottom of the steps, take a left to head towards Malham Cove for a closer look. Then, turn around and follow the path along the stream back towards the village. At the road, take a left and follow it along. Most importantly though, have a wonderful walk around Malham!

Through the early s, she was able to maintain her stature with impeccable quality control and stylistic evolution. She was the youngest of nine children in the Jackson family, and her older brothers had already begun performing together as the Jackson 5 by the time she was born. Bitten by the performing bug, she first appeared on-stage with the Jackson 5 at age seven, and began a sitcom acting career at the age of ten in , when producer Norman Lear selected her to join the cast of Good Times. She was cast in the musical series Fame in . Jackson took some time to rethink her musical career, and her father hired her a new manager, John McClain, who isolated his young charge to train her as a dancer and make her lose weight. Jackson collaborated with Jam and Lewis on most of the tracks for her next album, Control, which presented her as a confident and tough-minded artist with a soft side and a sense of humor taking charge of her life for the first time. Jackson was hailed as a role model and Control eventually sold over five million copies, establishing her as a pop star. For the hotly anticipated follow-up, McClain wanted to push Jackson toward more overtly sexual territory, to which she objected strenuously. Once on Virgin, Jackson set about revamping her sound and image. Jackson trumpeted her new image with a striking Rolling Stone cover photo -- an uncropped version of the cover of janet. Musically, Jam and Lewis set aside the synthesized funk of their first two albums with Jackson in favor of warm, inviting, gently undulating grooves. Jackson took credit for all the lyrics. In , Janet and Michael teamed up for the single "Scream," which was supported by an elaborate, award-winning, space-age video that, upon completion, ranked as the most expensive music video ever made. The single debuted at number five on the Hot 100. Yet while working on her next album, Jackson reportedly suffered an emotional breakdown, or at least a severe bout with depression. She later raised eyebrows when she talked in interviews about the cleansing value of coffee enemas as part of her treatment. Her next album, The Velvet Rope, appeared in and was touted as her most personal and intimate work to date. The Velvet Rope sought to combine the sensuality of janet. Critical opinion on the album was divided; some applauded her ambition, while others found the record too bloated. Jackson returned with a new album, All for You, in , which largely continued the sensual tone of janet. It debuted at number one, selling over 1 million copies in its first week alone. By then she was back in the studio, working once again with Jam and Lewis on tracks for a new album. Additional producers included Dallas Austin and Kanye West. But while the controversy gave Jackson both grief and a bit of free advertising, it was also the impetus for a national debate on public indecency. A federal commission was set up to investigate prurience, the FCC enacted tougher crackdowns on TV and radio programs broadcasting questionable content, and suddenly everyone from pundits to politicians to the man in the street had an opinion about it. Later that March, the singer quietly started making the talk show rounds. She was still apologizing for the incident -- while Timberlake escaped unscathed -- but she was also promoting Damita Jo, which Virgin issued at the end of the month. Largely considered a disappointment, the album nonetheless sold over two million copies worldwide and earned three Grammy nominations. Dupri moved to Island, and so did Jackson. In , Jackson released her tenth studio album, Discipline, which became her sixth release to top the Billboard 200, despite another tumultuous artist-label relationship. Soon after, she and Dupri split, and she toured in support of Number Ones, a double-disc anthology promoted with the number one club hit "Make Me Up." It primed her audience for a tour, as well as her 11th studio album, Unbreakable -- another number one hit.

I drew it from memory, based on a MapBlast map, and it is not necessarily to scale. Scroll down for a great aerial photo of the terminal. The Terminal is located in the block of S. Access is possible from the north via E. It is safe to drive by, although along the entire block there are "No Parking" signs on both sides of the road. There is some open space off the road, though. Despite obvious efforts to block the view, you can still get a decent view of the terminal, and the parked Janets on the other side. If you do go there, please be careful not to violate the law and try to play it low-key. I would hate to see more fences coming up. About 10 minutes after a Janet plane lands you can see a convoy of workers leaving the large parking lot about spaces through the two guarded access roads, and proceeding to the Strip via E. There used to be a good view spot at E. However, recently, after publishing that location on this web site, I found the view blocked by mothballed planes, that are now parked just inside the fence. Another good view spot is near the gate at the end of E. You get very close to the parked Janets there, but it is not immediately clear whether this dead-end road is still a public road, and on one occasion we were told in rather clear words to leave there by a security guard, dressed as a construction worker, but wearing a security badge. We have been told that on weekends there is no security, and it is possible to get close to the parked Janets for some good closeup shots. Make sure that you are not trespassing, though. This excellent aerial Photo of the Janet Terminal was taken in June, It shows the LV Strip on the far right, S. Two Janets are sitting by the terminal, on the black squares. South of the Janet Terminal you see the field with the mothballed planes. The image shows an area of x meters. The resolution is 2 x 2 meter per pixel. We got the image from the Microsoft Terraserver. It was brought to our attention by Guy Gigante. Click here for a 1 x 1 meter super high-resolution image. This 2-meter image if the same area was taken in March. Notice that there are hardly any cars in the parking lot, although judging from the angle of the sun the photo was taken around mid-day. This indicates that the photo was probably taken on a weekend. There are some more interesting changes compared to the photo above: The mothballed planes have been moved to the left, across the road. A new taxiway has been added, and the tarmac area of the Janet terminal is now smaller. The rightmost Janet parking space has been removed, and the one next to it seems to be no longer used as well. So there are exactly six spots remaining, all occupied in the photo.

But, I was flattered since everyone knows bears are cute and cuddly. At the same time every morning, our buses passed going opposite directions. The kids looking out those windows seemed like foreigners to me, heading off to some unknown land. I was sure nothing good happened on that side of Ashe Road. All summer I sulked and pleaded and howled at the moon. But no matter, at the beginning of the new school year in the fall, I was going to the dark side. So, on my first morning of fourth grade, I had to get on the bus that goes the wrong way. My happy Sugar Grove bus whistled past, right on time, while the bus I was on, sitting among strange children, sniveled by alien trees and barns. When we arrived, the bell rang and all the students went to their rooms, but Mr. Beels, the principal, gave me a tour. The school was a lot older than Sugar Grove. The wooden stairs and floors really creaked as we walked along. This was never going to work. But, I had never heard of such a thing. Who were these people? As we approached my new classroom, Mr. Beels told me his granddaughter was in my class. Everyone was already in their new seats as I tried desperately not to creak to mine. The year was , and Mrs. Alta Larson was our new teacher. Each morning, she led the class in the Pledge of Allegiance. Finley, an year-old marine from Big Rock, who was fighting in the Vietnam War at the time. Larson mentioned him often and we liked talking about him. As the year went on, the class grew to like Mrs. Larson, but Mike McCrea did most of all. At the end of each day, he gave her a kiss on the cheek before he got on the bus. The recipe was Mrs. She was one of the lunch ladies. Inside was a soft hot dog bug filled with hot tuna fish, boiled eggs and gooey cheese. One of the strange kids I rode with on the bus that first morning was Sara Moody. We sat together on the way home that day and many after that. But, by the end of my first year there, I was. Maybe it was the day Lee Butt was laughing so hard at lunch that a noodle from the soup she was eating came out her nose. Or maybe it was because of all the times the lunch ladies made those glorious bunsteads. But, if I had to choose one moment, it would be the day, toward the end of that year, that Mr. Beels entered our room, and sadly told us that Lance Cpl. Finley had been killed in action. Unlike many of the other kids, I had never met him, but I knew he was a part of me. And, 50 years later, he still is. I googled them once and was surprised that recipes for them existed. I thought it was just a Big Rock thing. A few years ago, a friend of mine found the official Roberta Scott recipe for bunsteads, and I am happy to share it with you. They are still divine. I gave her eulogy. My son named his oldest daughter after her. Ten years after high school, he joined the volunteer fire department. The rescue team was called to a home where an elderly lady had passed away. Mike held her hand as he helped carry her to the ambulance. Mike fixed my dish sprayer wand for me the other day, and I mentioned I was writing this column on the famous bunsteads. He told me he and his wife have tried to copy them, but they never came out very well. When I told him I had the official Roberta Scott recipe, he was a happy man. She was a nice lady. Wrap each in foil and heat 30 minutes in degree oven. Feedback on this column can be sent to editorial kcchronicle.
