It was renamed in honor of William Bucknell, a major benefactor. It has enrolled women since and, although founded by Pennsylvania Baptists especially to train teachers and missionaries, it always has been open to students and faculty of all religious faiths and it is nondenominational today. Over the years, the University has steadily evolved from a local, denominational institution to a highly visible national institution. The 3, undergraduates and 67 graduate students are drawn from most states and 54 countries, including 19 percent who are students of color and 7 percent from abroad. Prospective undergraduate interest is such that only This type is decidedly undergraduate and collegiate, providing for personalized, liberal learning, yet it incorporates the curricular complexity and scope of significantly larger institutions. Professional and preprofessional programs in the College of Engineering, music, education, and the Freeman College of Management do more than coexist with the liberal arts and sciences. Requirements are structured to develop context historical, cultural, and geographic for the study of nature and societies; the analytical tools and ability to reason; initiative and motivation to learn; and basic writing, quantification, and problem-solving skills. Because students will be living and working in a world where intercultural competence and technology will demand broad perspective and transferable habits of thought, Bucknell includes both independent and collaborative learning, as well as focused study in international and modern culture and issues, as cornerstones of the undergraduate experience. Great Teaching and Other Assets Notwithstanding the variety of intellectual commitments and practices represented at Bucknell, the faculty aspire to be great teachers universally and single-mindedly. They practice a most direct, energetic, and committed form of pedagogy, one result of which is a rich variety of close intellectual encounters between faculty and their students. Employment and graduate school placement figures are also very high. The acre campus is among the most attractive in the country; most of its more than facilities are described later in the catalog. The University provides comprehensive residential and student activities programs to support the educational mission and to promote personal growth and responsibility. Ninety-one percent of Bucknell students live on campus, enjoying options that include seven residential colleges. More than student organizations create a wide range of cocurricular and extracurricular opportunity in the arts, media, community service, religion, and other areas. An active Greek system involves about 55 percent of the eligible non-first-year students. Approximately one-fifth of all students participate in 27 varsity sports at the Division I level. Bucknell is a member of the Patriot League, whose member institutions share a commitment to the primacy of the academic experience. Bucknell ranked 1 in the nation in the NCAA student-athlete graduation rate report and 2 in the , , and reports, and 4 in the survey. The campus is bordered by the Susquehanna River and Lewisburg, a historic small town in scenic central Pennsylvania.
