

1: American mystery and detective writers | Search Results | IUCAT Kokomo

Best crime authors include classic mystery authors like the brilliant Agatha Christie to detective authors like Robert B. Parker, Robert Crais, and pulp crime fiction authors like Jim Thompson. Assembling a comprehensive list of the most popular crime writers is a daunting task, but I'm taking a leap and giving it a shot.

Retaining the air of Gothic mystery and horror tales or modifying imagery from Frontier myth, these non-classical forms were the origins of hard-boiled, and later noir, fiction in the U. There is a lot of overlap between "hard-boiled" and "noir," and the distinction is partly based on formal differences and partly on conditions of historical origin. On the question of historical origin, I understand "hard-boiled" to originate in the twenties, while "noir" follows in the thirties, developing out of Cornell Woolrich and elements of Dashiell Hammett and James Cain. Noir encompasses a wider, more flexible range of plots, types, and themes than the hardboiled detective story, and is the inspiration for the film noir in the post WW2, Cold War period. In addition to the hard-boiled and noir writers, the list also includes one work by Ed McBain, adapter of the police procedural French origins, which becomes the next dominant form in the American crime fiction tradition. Of particular interest will be the exchange between these writers and those of American high Modernism. Certain of these writers, such as Hammett, Cain, and Chandler, will be considered vernacular modernists, and the paradigms of the crime melodramas will be considered for the way they have been used by both canonical and vernacular modernists to address issues of inequality racial, sexual, and economic, the belatedness of narrative to event, the impact of Freudian psychoanalysis on literary form, and changing images of American manhood. Above all, the novels and stories in this field will be understood as examples of craft art, meaning that their authors developed and modified popular formulas to address genuine social and aesthetic problems. Hence the close reading bias of this field, for these works too often have been discussed in mass as treats purely escapist entertainment, rather than receiving intense, focused analysis. In this respect, the film noir has received much more advanced critical treatment than its literary sources; my work here is intended as a corrective to this lack. The Mugger – The Underdog Criminal: The Asphalt Jungle – Psychopath male and female versions: STYLE Many commentators have said that the prose style and voice of the hard-boiled writers is an insistently masculine one. What do we identify as masculine about the aspects of style and voice in the hardboiled novels? This question is inseparable from the issue of class, since these novels criticize the rich and upper middle classes for possessing style without integrity; they are consistently portrayed as effeminate and pretentious, their polite hypocrisy veiling that they are subject to lusts and violent drives like everyone else. Over and against this mannered, feminized style, the hard-boiled writers assert a voice that is supposed to be grounded in a tough, disenchanting world of authentic experience. What turns of speech, figurative language, and forms of humor compose this voice? Postman Always Rings Twice – Hammett: Red Harvest – Chandler: The Moving Target – Himes:

2: The 10 Best Mystery Books

A guide to research on American mystery and detective novels emphasizing the historical development of the genre and major critical approaches to the literature.

Cook Oct 18, Thomas H. A veteran thriller and mystery writer of over 20 books, Cook shared his favorite mystery novels. I went to the Alabama public schools at a time when my English teachers, all but one of whom was a woman, taught nothing but the classics. They revered the great British and American writers. As a result, my reading taste has always been guided by the sense that a novel should be a complete work of art, that action, alone, is not enough, and that it is moral dilemma that ups the ante in crime fiction just as it does in all other literary forms. For these reasons, the 10 books listed below are all novels that skew toward the literary. Their plots are character-driven and their action is organic. They have distinct narrative voices and the sense of place is, as they say, palpable. That said, they are extraordinarily different in time, place, style, voice and probably in every other way one novel can be technically different from another. In the end, of course, the relationship between a novel and a reader is one in which one subjectivity confronts another. My choices are admittedly subjective, with plenty of room for disagreement, but in my view they remain if not the 10 best mysteries ever written, certainly my favorites. It is large and sweeping, with skillfully drawn characters, lovely passages and absolutely haunting scenes, a fully formed 19th century novel with all the trimmings. The story is complicated, but it was originally written in serial form, so the story moves forward in carefully measured steps. Much of what became standard in crime fiction was first done here, so it is not only an engaging read, but a fundamentally instructive one. A Crime in the Neighborhood by Suzanne Berne - I have recommended this book many times to all kinds of readers. For me, it is a novel that uses suspense in the best possible way, not by having a character confront one contrived obstacle after another in a mindless stream of action, but by creating an atmosphere of deep moral peril in which the culminating tragedy seems as inevitable as it is, well—tragic. It is also one of those books in which the title become completely apt, and very moving, after one has completed the book. The good news is that the book lives up to the title. This is psychological suspense for adults, with real people confronting real, and very dark problems. Dimitrios, in life and death, is a figure of surpassing fascination, his life a tale of struggle and fierce intrigue that I have never forgotten. The secondary characters are wonderfully drawn. From the moment Charles Latimer meets Colonel Haki and hears of the mysterious Dimitrios, the reader is returned to the lost Balkan world that flourished between the two world wars, a boiling cauldron of expediency and deceit that Ambler renders in exquisite detail. It is a story of two brothers, one a cop, the other a priest, and by following their relationship along the trail of a gruesome crime, it ultimately becomes one of the most movingly redemptive novels I have ever read. The Eye of the Beholder by Marc Behm - I read this novel years and years ago, and have never been able to get it out of my mind. It is a story of obsession, with a private detective called only The Eye who follows a nameless female serial killer for more than a decade. The Eye is the classically damaged PI, not just solitary, but deeply lonely, and the woman he pursues is a heartless--yet in some sense comprehensible--hater of men. The macabre dance of death that becomes their lives is one of the strangest and most intriguing relationships in mystery fiction. A Simple Plan by Scott Smith - In this wholly realistic novel, two brothers and a friend come upon a crashed plane in whose shattered ruins they find an enormous sum of money. Before that moment, none of these men has ever needed to concoct a simple plan to keep and conceal a fortune that quite obviously does not belong them. In the midst of doing just that, they become criminals, as well as victims of crime. The story builds steadily as the wages of sin become more and more costly. Here is a classic cautionary tale about the penalty dishonesty may exact upon ordinary, and largely innocent, human beings. Sneaky People by Thomas Berger - This is arguably one of the funniest crime novels ever written. It is set in the s, and its main character is Buddy Sandifer, a used car dealer who wants one very simple thing: The reason is no less simple. He yearns to live the rest of his days with Laverne, a woman who on occasion dimly realizes that sleeping with men for money adds up to prostitution. Part novel of intrigue, part mystery, part love story, The Quiet American remains as powerful today as when it was first written. Wolfe, may not have committed the crime at all.

3: The Top Mystery Novels of All Time Mystery Writers of America | Awards | LibraryThing

American mystery and detective novels appeared in the late nineteenth century. This reference provides a selective guide to the important criticism of American mystery and detective novels and presents general features of the genre and its historical development over the past two centuries.

Mystery and crime novels are my catnipâ€™booknip? A few titles will require a trip to the library or purchasing a used copy. Wivesman Translation â€™ Finding blood splattered money is never bound to end well which seventeen-year-old Lumikki Andersson is about to find outâ€™ originally published Skyscape. Bitter Lemon Press, Sept. Watson â€™ Psychological and mysterious, Christine wakes every morning having to be find out that she has amnesia that keeps her from storing new memories. Confessions by Kanae Minato, Stephen Snyder Translation â€™ Discovering that her daughter is dead and two of her middle school students are responsible Yuko Moriguchi chooses revengeâ€™ Cormoran Strike series by Robert Galbraith â€™ The secret is out, this is J. Also adapted into a manga. Addicting read and great audiobook narrators. Killing Auntie by Andrzej Bursa, Wiesiek Powaga Translation â€™ After killing his aunt and needing to dispose of the body Jurek finds himself smitten by a fellow passenger on the trainâ€™ Last Winter, We Parted by Fuminori Nakamura â€™ A dark novel where a writer goes to interview a convicted murdererâ€™ Malice: Smith Translation â€™ Currently the only one translated to English from the Kyoichiro Kaga Series where Detective Kaga must solve the murder of a famous novelist. Aka the series with Lisbeth Salander. Dark, dark, dark, and awesome. This creepy AF novel. Smith Translation â€™ The wife of the man murdered by poison is the logical suspect but how is it possible if she was away? Still Mine by Amy Stuart â€™ Suspenseful, with duel mysteries as one woman is missing and another, clearly pretending to be someone else, shows up in a small town asking questionsâ€™ Touchstone, August 16th The Accidental Apprentice by Vikas Swarup â€™ A rich man approaches a young saleswoman claiming to not have a successor and if she passes his seven tests she will be the CEO of his billion-dollar businessâ€™ The Agency Series by Ying S. The Breaker by Minette Walters â€™ For fans of whodunits: The Complete Adventures of Feluda , Vol. Mitter Feluda with his cousin Topshe, and crime writer Jatayu as they travel solving crimes, mysteries, and having adventures. For fans of surrealism. Will avenging their deaths make them finally go away? Perfect for historical fiction fans. Bonus points for the detective who reads mysteries to prove them wrong. Also, Christie is always a great reread. A ten-year-old detective investigates imaginary mysteries at the mall until she disappears.

4: Category:American crime fiction writers - Wikipedia

AMERICAN MYSTERY AND DETECTIVE WRITERS contains career biographies of thirty-three leading mystery authors such as John D. MacDonald, Walter Mosley, Robert B. Parker, Rex Stout, Earl Derr Biggers, Tony Hillerman, Edward D. Hoch, S.S. Van Dine, John Dickson Carr and F. van Wyck Mason.

For books published after , see American Mysteries Since The Private Detective Following the beginning of Prohibition, crime and accompanying dishonesty in police departments and in city hall increased. This development provided the inspiration for the fictional private eye. Two-fisted, hard-drinking, honest to a certain extent, the detective fought against crime and corruption. This is an extensive history of the writers and themes of hard-boiled detective novels. These Dicks Were Janes - In the age of pulps, there were women who were hard boiled private detectives. Film Noir - Movies in the hard boiled tradition. It and other pulp fiction magazines published the stories of many of the private detectives. This story was published in the May 15, issue of Black Mask Magazine. For more information about Daly, see Wikipedia. Dashiell Hammett Hammett was the first successful author of novels of the tough private detective. His book The Red Harvest was published in . He was active in the Communist party, was a subject of the McCarthy investigations, and went to prison for a short time for failing to reveal what he knew about other party members. Kendrick was born in Philadelphia, Pa, and graduated from Episcopal Academy in . He was the first American to join the Canadian Army. He served in France and was decorated by both the British and Canadian governments. He published his first novel, Blood on Lake Louise in . He lived in many parts of the US and worked at a wide variety of jobs. He was an organizer of The Blind Veterans Association and served on its board. The movie Bright Victory is based on his novel Lights Out. Kendrick was one of the founders of the Mystery Writers of America, and was named a Grand Master in . Adams - - Adams was born in Chicago. In , he moved to California and worked at a variety of jobs such as soda jerk, interior decorator, copper miner, detective, and film director. He published 50 short stories between and . He was one of the few writers who made the successful transition from pulp fiction to writing detective novels. His first novels Sabotage and And Sudden Death were published in , and he published 13 more novels after this. Shannon, were hard fighting and very tough characters. Adams was a founding member of the Fictioneers, a group of pulp writers, in Los Angeles. Raymond Chandler - Chandler continued the tough guy tradition which Hammett had started. For a biography, bibliography, and filmography, go to the Raymond Chandler page of the Thrilling Detective web site. Earle Stanley Gardner Gardner originally practised law. He, however, hoped that if he became an author that he would have both financial success and more free time. He wrote many short stories which were published in pulp magazine before In , he published The Case of the Velvet Claw which was the first Perry Mason novel. This book was the first in a long series of extremely popular books about the crime fighting lawyer. This article is by John Charles in Booklist, May 3, Cain - Cain was born in Annapolis, MD. He published short stories in pulp magazines and, in , his first and most famous novel The Postman Always Rings Twice was published. Cain also worked as a screenwriter in Hollywood for 17 years. Cain never did write a true detective novel. Several were made in successful movies such as Double Indemnity and Mildred Pierce. Cain was named a Grand Master of Mystery in . His biography and bibliography may be found at the Wikipedia web site.. His filmography may be found at the Internet Movie Database. He attended both Purdue University and Cornell University and never did obtain a degree. He worked at a variety of odd jobs until he moved west and became a journalist for the Santa Monica Outlook and later with the Los Angeles Express. He moved back east and worked for several newspapers. In , he became a full time writer, and wrote stories for pulp magazines. He would write 63 novels during his lifetime. He wrote several series and some stand alone novels. Two of his series dealt with the exploits of Jack Flashgun Casey, a photographer for the Boston Globe and of Kent Murdock, a photographer for the Boston Courier-Herald, A bibliography of his books may be found at the Fantastic Fiction web site. His books have been reissued in ebook form by Mysterious Press. Dresser was born in Chicago. He ran away from home at age fourteen and enlisted in the army. He was discharged two years later when his real age was discovered. He worked at odd jobs and received a certificate in civil engineering. He could not find a job during the depression so he turned to writing stories for pulp magazines. His first Mike Shayne novel Dividend on Death was published in 1937. This book had been rejected 22 times before it was published by Henry Holt. The Mike Shayne character was a break with the tradition of the hard-drinking, hard-fighting private detective. Shayne was more likely to use his brain to solve a case. For more information, see the article at Wikipedia. The Mike Shayne novels were produced after Halliday stopped writing them and more information about this may be found at the Thrilling Detective web site. James Holding was a prolific writer of short stories. He wrote short stories under the name of Ellery Queen, after the real Queen authors could no longer write, and wrote for the Ellery Queen Mystery Magazine and other mystery magazines. He created the "Library Fuzz" series of short stories about detective Hal Johnson who tracks down overdue library books and solves crimes along the way. This is a series which will definitely appeal to librarians and library fans. These stories are available from Amazon in the Library Fuzz Megapack. Millar was born in California, and had a doctorate in English literature, and, at one time, was a university professor. He was married to Margaret Millar who was also a successful mystery novelist. He wrote under the name MacDonald to avoid confusion with her books. Macdonald is best known for his books featuring Lew Archer. The first of these, The Moving Target was published in 1937. His biography and bibliography may be found at the Thrilling Detective web site. He attended Brooklyn College and graduated at the height of the great depression. He worked at a variety of odd jobs while he unsuccessfully tried to sell his fiction. He served in the army at the end of World War II. After the war, he became more successful in his writing career. In 1947, he published his first novel Dreadful Summit. During his lifetime, Ellin published 14 novels and four collections of short stories. More biographical information may be found at the Golden Age of Detection web site. A bibliography of his works may be found at the Fantastic Fiction web site. He studied business administration before entering the army in 1942. MacDonald began writing short stories for pulp magazines when he was still in the army. His first novel The Brass Cupcake was published in 1945. He is best known for the Travis McGee series. He was named a Grand Master of Mystery in 1978. For more information, see his homepage Mickey Spillane - Spillane was born and grew up in a tough section of Brooklyn, NY. He started writing for slick magazines before turning to pulp fiction. He also wrote comic books and was the originator of Captain Marvel and Captain America. After the war, he worked for Barnum and Bailey Circus as a trampoline performer. Spillane is best known for his brutal tough guy hero Mike Hammer. For more information, try the Thrilling Detective web site. Parker - Parker was 40 before he turned to writing. His first book The Godwulf Manuscript featuring his tough private eye Spenser no first name was published in 1952. For more information, go to an article and bibliography at the Bookreporter web site. Parker also has a web site. Donald Westlake - Westlake was a prolific author of crime fiction and wrote over 90 books. He published under several pseudonyms of which the best known is probably Richard Stark.

5: American Mystery Novels - The Private Detective

Crime fiction is a literary genre in which criminal activity or its detection is the central point of the plot. For authors who write genre stories in which a puzzle must be solved, in almost all cases involving a crime, see Category: American mystery writers.

The Nearest Exit , by Olen Steinhauer The world of the CIA black-ops unit called the Tourists is a dazzling, dizzying, complex web of clandestine warfare that is complicated further by affairs of the heart. Powerful stuff, written in a clipped style that belies its ability to convey strong emotion. An Officer and a Spy , by Robert R. Harris Best-selling historical novelist Harris looks behind a well-known event to find a world of fascinating detail and remarkably complex intrigue. The Orphan Choir , by Sophie Hannah This riveting stand-alone, in which suspense snowballs to a climax that is all the more dire for its everyday contemporary English setting, is absolutely haunting, in every sense of the word. Out of Range , by C. Painted Ladies , by Robert B. His penultimate Spenser novel captures all the charm of the landmark series. This tense, thoughtful thriller about an armored-car robbery gets into the heads of both the robber and the Dublin copper who tracks him. Start the word-of-mouth going: Kerrigan is the real deal. Red Means Run , by Brad Smith Mixing comedy, caper, and suspense in just the right proportions, Smith keeps the narrative cantering along at a comfortable pace, not so fast as to keep us from enjoying the banter but not so slow as to make us want to use the whip. Moving from WWII into the early days of the new century, the novel unfurls a complex plot in which the wounds of history continue to bleed in the present. This fourth entry finds the inspector traveling to a remote resort to celebrate his wedding anniversary; naturally, murder is on the guest list. Despite similarities to Poirot and Maigret, Gamache is a complete original. The Rules of Wolfe , by James Carlos Blake Building on his quasi-autobiographical saga Country of the Bad Wolfes , Blake uses the characters of his sprawling Mexican American clan to offer a new spin on the hard-edged outlaw tale. A masterful mix of the high-concept historical thriller and the cynical contemporary Italian procedural. French brilliantly and plausibly channels the rebellion, conformity, inchoate longings, rages, and shared bonds of teen girls in the throes of coming-of-age. The crimes two kidnappings are breathtakingly awful, the pacing is breakneck, and the stakes are higher than ever. Shovel Ready , by Adam Sternbergh This galvanizing debut thriller boasts a compelling antiheroic protagonistâ€”a garbage collector turned hit manâ€”and a vividly evoked landscape in which Manhattan is reeling from a dirty bomb. Mixing edgy science and urban noir with a Palahniuk swagger, Sternbergh creates flesh-and-blood characters who bring humor and a resilient humanity to their torn-asunder world. Gores creates a compelling backstory for Sam Spade and does it so completely in the Hammett style that we suspend disbelief in an instant. For its singular melding of radiant humor and dark deeds, this is must-reading for fans of literary crime fiction. Who would have thought that one of the most multifaceted and appealing new protagonists in crime fiction would be a hard-boiled dog? The Thicket , by Joe R. Lansdale In this turn-of-the-century coming-of-age tale, year-old Jack Parkerâ€”accompanied by a pair of eccentric bounty huntersâ€”tracks the outlaws who have killed his parents and abducted his sister. Memorable characters, a vivid sense of place, and an impressive body count make The Thicket another Lansdale treasure. Tigerman , by Nick Harkaway Harkaway is at it again, celebrating pop culture, mixing genres like a mad scientist, and producing a book that is both deeply moving and deliriously entertaining. Owing as much to Murakami as Stan Lee, this ode to superheroes combines suspense with coming-of-age drama and a noir sensibility. A Thousand Cuts , by Simon Lelic A recently hired history teacher walks into a school assembly, shoots three students and one teacher, and then turns the gun on himself. An open-and-shut case, right? The Troubled Man , by Henning Mankell This is a deeply melancholy novel, but Mankell, sweeping gracefully between reflections on international politics and meditations on the inevitable arc of human life, never lets his story become engulfed by darkness. A perverted villain or villains. A chase to save the victim. These are not unfamiliar ingredients in crime fiction, but Katzenbach reinvents the formula several times over in this absolutely gripping novel, combining the intricacy of psychological fiction with the pulse-pounding narrative of plot-driven suspense. Woodrell, who has made a career of finding poetry in the beat-up souls of Ozark rednecks, mixes tough and tender in word-perfect proportions. Wyatt , by Garry Disher Wyatt Wareen, an unsentimental thief with a code, gets double-crossed on a jewel heist and sets out to send a message. An old-style holdup man uncomfortable with technology, Wyatt may be a man out of time, but crime fiction this good is timeless. In delectable prose seasoned with all manner of Yiddish wordplay, the novel combines satire, homage, metaphor, and genuine suspense. The Zero , by Jess Walter This discombobulating but remarkably imaginative novel posits a disconnected world in which both reader and investigator must piece together not only a conspiracy theory but also shards of meaning floating in the atmosphere like the bits of paper that continue to rain down from ground zero after the explosions. Walter has taken the terrorist thriller into altogether new territory, mixing the surreal cityscape of Blade Runner with a generous helping of Kafka. Readers who love Anna Karenina as much as they enjoy a gripping mystery will find a little slice of heaven here.

6: Search Results for "american crime writers" • " www.enganchecubano.com

Kendrick was one of the founders of the Mystery Writers of American, and was named a Grand Master in Cleve F. Adams (-) - Adams was born in Chicago. In , he moved to California and worked at a variety of jobs such as soda jerk, interior decorator, copper miner, detective, and film director.

Helen Kieran grew up in New York City. She married Paul Reilly and they had four daughters. She started writing mystery novels at the urging of a friend and her first book, The Diamond Feather was published in . She wrote more than thirty books under her own name and three under the name of Kiernan Abbey. For more information, see the very informative article by Michael Grost. King wrote only one book, Holiday Homicide featuring private detective Cotton Moon. Interest in his novels fell off after this and King turned to writing short stories. For more information on his writings, see The Golden Age of Detection web site. For more information on his movies, see the Internet Movie Database. Zelda Popkin - - Ms. Popkin wrote five mystery novels which featured Mary Carner, a store detective, who was one of the first female detectives in mystery literature. She also wrote one of the first novels about the Holocaust. For more information, visit this web site by her grandson. Hughes - - Dorothy B. Hughes wrote crime novels and was a reviewer of mystery novels. She was born in Kansas City, Missouri. She graduated from the University of Missouri with a journalism degree. In , she wrote Erle Stanley Gardner: The Case of the Real Perry Mason which is a biography of that author. Several of her novels have been reissued and are available at Amazon. More biographical information may be found at Wikipedia. More information about her films may be found at The Internet Movie Database. He started writing novels while a student at Columbia University. These novels were in the style of F. Scott Fitzgerald and were not good sellers. He wrote his first mystery novel in and his career took off from there. He was a very strange man. His marriage lasted only a few weeks, and he lived with his mother for the rest of her life. They lived in cheap hotels even though he was making money good money. She died in , and Woolrich went into a physical and mental decline. He had a very unfortunate life, and he was an alcoholic, friendless, and feared that he was homosexual. Woolrich was a master of writing novels and short stories which were full of dread and terror, and they were very popular in their day. A bibliography of his works may be found at Fantastic Fiction. Helen McCloy - - Ms. McCloy wrote a series featuring Dr. Basil Willing, a psychiatrist and consultant to law enforcement agencies. She returned to the US in . She was married to author Brett Halliday. Her biography and bibliography may be found at the Golden Age of Detection web site. Charlotte Armstrong - Armstrong was born in Vulcan, Michigan. She attended the University of Michigan and received her degree from Barnard College. She sold classified advertisement for the New York Times and also worked as a fashion reporter. She married Jack Lewi in , and quit work to raise her three children. She published her first mystery Lay On, McDuff in . After two other novels were published, she had great success with the novel The Unsuspected which was made into a movie as was a later novel Mischief. She received an Edgar award for A Dram of Poison in . Her novels were mainly novels of suspense. Her film credits are given at The Internet Movie Database. Further biographical information and a bibliography of her books may be found at The Golden Age of Detection Wiki. Chester Himes - wrote the first mystery series which featured African-American detectives. Himes was born in Jefferson City, Missouri. He graduated from Glenville High School in Cleveland. He entered Ohio State University but he engaged in several nonapproved activities and was expelled from the university. In , he was arrested for armed robbery and sentenced to 20 to 25 years in prison. He was parolled to his mother in . He worked at a variety of jobs including the Ohio State Writers project. In , he moved to Europe. For a biography, visit the Detnovel web site. After college, they married, and Kenneth wrote under the pen name of Ross Macdonald to avoid the confusion of two mystery writers with the same last name. She wrote mainly novels of psychological suspense. She won two Edgar awards and in , received the award for lifetime achievement. She was elected president of the Mystery Writers of America in . For more extensive biographical information, visit the Los Angeles Review of Books web site. A bibliography of her books may be found at the Golden Age of Detection web site. Patricia Highsmith - Highsmith is a master of the crime novel. Highsmith was born in Fort Worth, Texas. Her first suspense novel, Strangers on a Train was published in and was an immediate success. Her subsequent books were much better received in Europe than in the United States. She is well know for the series about murderer and con man, Tom Ripley. The first Ripley book was The Talented Mr. Ripley which was published in More biographical information may be found at Wikipedia. He had a career in journalism and wrote a series of novels featuring Navaho Tribal policemen Leaphorn and Chee. The first of these was The Blessing Way which was published in A bibliography and short biography may be found at Fantastic Fiction. McBain has established himself as the premier writer of police procedural novels. His series about the 87th Precinct began with Cop Hater which was published in Smith has written several series. The Skip Langdon series features a woman police detective in New Orleans. Smith also writes a series about African-American poet and private investigator Talba Wells who also lives in New Orleans. A biography and bibliography may be found at Wikipedia. Also visit her Web site. Patricia Cornwell - - Series featuring Kay Scarpetta, medical examiner. Her first book Postmortem was published in Please address any comments, additions, or corrections to info sldirectory.

7: The Best Crime Authors | Famous Mystery Writers

The Modern Library's Best Novels: The Reader's List San Francisco Chronicle list of The 20th Century's Best Fiction of the American West D°D½D, D³, D°D¾Ñ, D¾ÑÑ•Dµ D´D¾D»D¶DµD½ D¿Ñ€D¾Ñ±D, Ñ, D°Ñ, ÑCE D°D°D¶D´Ñ•D¹ D¿D¾ D¾D½DµD½D, ÑŽ D”D¾D, Ñ, Ñ€D, Ñ• D´Ñ•D°D¾D²D°.

8: Best Female Crime/Mystery/Thriller Writers (books)

The Best Crime Novels of the Past Decade. Mystery Month is in full swing here at Booklist, with all of the interviews, webinars, and blog posts about mystery fiction you could possibly want.

9: The Best Mystery Authors and Writers

Crime doesn't pay enough. | Mystery Writers of America.

Nuclear magnetic resonance metabonomics: methods for drug discovery and development Karl-Heinz Ott and Ne P. 13.
[Woodcut. Figure of an Orante (male). From the Cemetery of SS. Marcellinus and Petrus. (Aringhi R. The Routledge Philosophy Guidebook to Hegel and Philosophy of Right (Routledge Philosophy Guidebooks) Leading Learning,
Learning to Lead Language is the universal medium- New American village Ancient Civilizations and Ruins of Turkey
Police Under Fire On the track of the mail-coach The Three Imposters and Other Stories The Case of the Stolen Necklace B c williams engineering fluid mechanics 11th edition In a Different Light (National Library of Poetry Anthology Series) The politics of the press Characteristic #5 : CCM can be identified by its weak, unscriptural message Maritime Southeast Asia to 1500 Sap business objects reporting tutorial Modern human resource management Second list of resident and non-resident members and associates William H. H. Lang. Price Guide to Tonka Trucks, 1947-1963
Athanasia, or, Foregleams of immortality Writing the article Report of cases determined on the crown side on the Northern circuit Blue iris user manual Charlemagnes Legacy High Medieval Franc (High Medieval) How to measure angles from foot radiographs Pocket dictionary of the Chinook jargon Duel for the Crown Garden poems john hollander Titanic (Graphic History (Graphic History) History of Modern Biotechnology I (Advances in Biochemical Engineering Biotechnology) Relevant facts and statistics Supernatural Proust For the establishment of a united party of the working masses New Life for White Elephants Understanding Magnetism Everyday cosmetic practices The unreel drum book 7 strategies for success