Julia Peterson, faint with fatigue, was tolling back and forth between the corn rows, holding the handles of the double-shovel corn plow while her little brother Otto rode the steaming horse. Her heart was full of bitterness, and her face flushed with heat, and her muscles aching with fatigue.

Get inspired and choose the hairdo that best matches with your preferences. Back Swept Plaits This is a simple hairstyle which looks cool and very chic. The hair is braided in thick corn rows which start thin and might be mistaken for Ghana ones. The thick rows are swept back in four lines which allow the short hair to be held at the back by a scrunch. Banana-in differs from ordinary braiding because it gives the impression that the hair is tucked inside the row. It is a timeless hairdo. Ghana Corn Rows Ending in a Bun The style is expertly done with clean curving lines which meet where top of the head meets the crown. The braids used in the rows are plaited to the end with the ends hidden in a beautiful bun. The mixture between the dark hair and brown extensions give the rows a dark color. Curved Corn Rows with an Afro This sassy hairdo is mainly an Afro with a small area on one side of the head done up in short corn row lines. The curved lines disappearing into the Afro and the ginger brown color of the Afro both highlight the liveliness of this elegant up do. These dark coloured rows only start at the front and back, no side ones. There are only a handful of them because of the thickness; all end at the crown of the head where they become box braids coiled into a high bun. Intricately Designed Corn Rows with Mohawk Only seasoned hair dressers with an expertise in corn rowing can do this beautiful but highly elaborate style. A stylish look is created by the Mohawk which tops the centre of the head in a regal look which is eye-catching. Corn Row Braided Curls This style is a simple braid made out of the naturally curling hair. The braid is slightly pulled back from the forehead and cuts across the head from temple to temple. Coupled with the black highlights on the Burgundy tinted hair the braiding makes the hair style very chic. Thin Corn Rows with Faux Locks This is an artistically plaited style with corn rows starting around the ears and forehead and meeting at the centre of the head. The rows are haphazardly styled and they disappear at the top of the head. The top is braided into fake locks which are then interwoven creatively to give a unique look. African Braided Mohawk This braided Mohawk style has a striking plum color which is captivating. The stylish corn rows look neat. They start from all sides of the head to disappear into the Mohawk which starts from the top of the head going back until it almost reaches the nape. The Mohawk style is creatively made. Corn Rows with Mohawk Curls This hairdo comprises short traditional corn rows disappearing into thick black curls put on top of the head Mohawk style. The lines start from around the head and meet at the crown where they disappear into the curls to create an irresistible look of elegance and class. Ghana Corn Rows with Semi-Mohawk Style The Ghana rows are cleanly made in semi-circular lines which, some of which meet the Mohawk at the nape, crown and some moving parallel to it. The Mohawk look is artfully crafted by twisted intertwining braids which start at the top of the head going down to the nape. Sleek Corn Rows with a Bun This is a simple but trendy hairdo. The corn rows are neatly done, with all of them starting from one side of the face and ending in box braids at the crown of the head where they are coiled into a bun. The lines are nicely spaced and curve gently. Hundred Lines Corn Rows This style of corn rows is called by different names depending on where you are. It is made up of very thin lines starting from the forehead going backwards. In this particular one, the thin lines end at the nape and there change into very thin pony tailed box braids which are very long. Thin Corn Rows The corn rows in this hairdo are neatly done in lines which end at the centre of the head. It is a well done style with the natural hair from the corn rows being held at the centre and plaited into one corn row stretching from the top of the head right to the back. Stylish Ghana Corn Rows This is an expertly done hairdo with Ghana rows starting at the top of the head and slightly curving outward as they go backwards in an artistic way. As those rows near the crown, the curve sharply downwards to pave way for more rows which begin at the crown going downwards. Snake Tail Corn Rows Creativity is highlighted in this style which looks like the tails of snakes. The small and thin curling lines feed into two jumbo corn rows which go all the ways from the top of the head to the nape. This is an interesting and captivating style which would look well on the youths. Snaking Ghana Corn Rows The swanky look created by this style comes from the combination of very thin and medium sized Ghana rows. The rows start right at the centre of the forehead and spiral sideways and downwards right to the back of the head where they are joined into long and thick box braids. Dutch Plaited Pile The thickness of the braids allows creativity to lead in this glamorous hairstyle. The style comprises a ringed crown and nape with thick braids piled on top of the head in a way that could only be done by an experienced hand. The brown colour makes this very stylish.

Corn Rows with Rolled Bun This is a swanky hairdo with corn rows which start at the nape with and near the ears and meet at the centre of the head. Hair extensions are rolled into a bun stretching from the top of the head to the nape and have a rich brown colour to go with the style. The simple rows are made in slightly curving lines which end at the back where they are braided into box braids which most likely reach the bum area. The rows are curving and are in variant sizes and lengths and they meet at the centre of the head where they are swallowed into the Bantu knots.

Jumbo Ghana Corn Rows The thick jumbo braids look cool in this style which, in true Ghana corn rows style; starts thin and get bigger. The lines slightly curve near the forehead where some baby hairs are displayed. The rows go all the way to nape where they are left loose as long thick box braids.

Corn Rows with Face Framing Twists The corn rows in this style start at the front going all the way to the back. The back and top of the head are covered in fancy twists which frame the face in what can be called a loose Mohawk style. This style looks great in black.

Flower Crown Design Corn Rows This is one of the most expertly and creatively done hairstyles you can come across. The corn rows are arranged at the crown of the head in a circular flower with intricate designs within designs going outwards towards the top of the head, the sides and the nape.

Twin Bunned Ghana Corn Rows This is a ritzy style with corn rows starting at the top of the head a little shy from the centre. The rows are captivating in their seeming disorderliness and they are made to move backwards to the crown where they are divided into two buns on either side of the crown.

Stylish Ghana Corn Rows This is a really glamorous hairdo with the beginnings of the rows creating an intricate pattern on one side of the head. The other lines slightly curve to accentuate the beauty of the pattern already created. The honey gold colour of the braids complement the style in a way no other colour would.

Ghana Corn Rows with Curls Everything in this classy hair style complements the other in a way nothing else could achieve. The expertly done snaking rows which disappear into the thick curls and the dark hair with a brownish tint all work together in the creation of an exceptionally captivating hair do.

Ghana Corn Rows with Twist The different sizes of the lines and the different colours enhance the beauty of this hair style. The lines are stylishly done in three sizes and start from the forehead going backwards where they are twisted and left to fall freely onto the shoulder. The twist ends are carrot ended.

Short corn Rows in Curly Hair The corn rows in this hairdo are very short and done on thick, short and curly hair. The corn rows are only done on one side of the head leaving the larger part of the head with the ginger curls. The corn rows turn this otherwise dull hair into a chic style.

Simply Spaced Corn Rows This extra simplified hairdo is made from natural hair which is plaited into corn rows with each row tied into a Bantu knot at the end. The rows meet near the centre of the head where bigger Bantu knots have been created in their own centre line to give an outstanding style. The style creates three corn rows which are back swept and then twisted and left to hang freely at the back.

Interwoven Corn Rows The black and white combinations of the hair colors in this style add to the intricate designs make this a highly daring hairstyle. The style does not follow rigid patterns with some hair plaited into corn rows and some into box braids and all this interwoven in a catchy way. The hair has a dark colour and a lighter one to add to the allure of this rather chic hairdo. In this style, a small section of the hair is plaited into a single French plait which goes all the way to the back and is box braided. The single box braid joins the rest of the hair to hang loose at the back of the head.

Centre Plaits This is a glamorous hair style created by plaiting the centre portion of the hair into corn rows that go backwards. The rows meet the rest of the undone hair and let loose, possible tied with an accessory to prevent getting undone. This combination of the loose hair and the plaits is alluring. The thinner lines at the sides are artfully made to combine with the untouched front hair to give the style a really chic look.

Ringed Twist The design in this hairdo is nothing less than intricate. A small section of hair is separated from the rest and twisted into a single twist plait going towards the back. Tiny rings are then interwoven into the sections where the hair twists to create a funky look which is accentuated by the whitish blond shade of the hair.

Haphazard Dutch Plaits Haphazard is the only way to describe this hairdo with its different patterns of the same plaits, different sizes of plaits and even different levels of looseness. The style looks like different hands plaited different portions of the hair but the hairdo is ritzy all the same. Loose French Plaits The hair is divided into equal portions to create a symmetrical look in this timeless French plait which anyone can easily DIY. The hair close to the scalp has a deeper shade and the box braided hair has a lighter one and this makes the hairstyle cool. Loose Braiding A loosely done French braid in a shock of hair with two distinct colors, one dark and the other light. The braid goes all the way to the back where it is pulled up in a pony-tail together with the rest of the unplaited hair in a style befitting any teen girl. Corn row hairstyles are fascinating! The actual braiding styles is incredibly varied and meticulous. Make your pick and get corn rows to protect your hair and add a twist to your current hairdo.

Among the Corn Rows by Hamlin Garland. A corn-field in July is a sultry place. The soil is hot and dry; the wind comes across the lazily murmuring leaves laden with a warm, sickening smell drawn from the rapidly growing, broad-flung banners of the corn.

The crowd stared at him in a dead silence. Come, now, Rob, tell us where you found her. Any man with such a cheek ought to--" "Succeed," interrupted Seagraves. I pray the lady may not "Mislike him for his complexion, The shadowed livery of the burning sun. Another season on an untried sea? The absurdity of it grew, and they went into spasms of laughter. But Wilson remained impassive, not the twitching of a muscle betraying that he saw anything to laugh at in the proposition. Whiting and the kitchen girls came in, wondering at the merriment. Rob began to get uneasy. Whiting, a jolly little matron. Rivers put the case. The crowd looked at each other. This was hint enough; they sobered, nodding at each other. I see; I understand. I thought something was wrong when I saw the collar. You make me tired. They followed him in single file. The rest of the town "caught on. Rob went into the store to buy some tobacco. They followed and perched like crows on the counters till he went out; then they followed him, as before. They watched him check his trunk; they witnessed the purchase of the ticket. The town had turned out by this time. But no; their last stroke was to follow him into the car, nodding, pointing to their heads, and whispering, managing in the half-minute the train stood at the platform to set every person in the car staring at the crazy man. Anybody want to wager? II "Follow it far enough and it may pass the bend in the river where the water laughs eternally over its shallows. The soil is hot and dry; the wind comes across the lazily murmuring leaves laden with a warm sickening smell drawn from the rapidly growing, broad-flung banners of the corn. The sun, nearly vertical, drops a flood of dazzling light and heat upon the field over which the cool shadows run, only to make the heat seem the more intense. Julia Peterson, faint with fatigue, was tolling back and forth between the corn rows, holding the handles of the double-shovel corn plow while her little brother Otto rode the steaming horse. Her heart was full of bitterness, and her face flushed with heat, and her muscles aching with fatigue. The heat grew terrible. The corn came to her shoulders, and not a breath seemed to reach her, while the sun, nearing the noon mark, lay pitilessly upon her shoulders, protected only by a calico dress. Her head throbbed dangerously. All these things, if she saw them, only threw her bondage to labor into greater relief. Across the field, in another patch of corn, she could see her father--a big, gruff-voiced, wide-bearded Norwegian--at work also with a plow. The corn must be plowed, and so she toiled on, the tears dropping from the shadow of the ugly sunbonnet she wore. Her shoes, coarse and square-toed, chafed her feet; her hands, large and strong, were browned, or more properly burned, on the backs by the sun. The field ran down to a road, and on the other side of the road ran a river--a broad, clear, shallow expanse at that point, and the eyes of the boy gazed longingly at the pond and the cool shadow each time that he turned at the fence. Soon she could hear him splashing about in the water a short distance up the stream, and caught glimpses of his little shiny body and happy face. How cool that water looked! And the shadows there by the big basswood! How that water would cool her blistered feet! An impulse seized her, and she squeezed between the rails of the fence and stood in the road looking up and down to see that the way was clear. It was not a main-travelled road; no one was likely to come; why not? She hurriedly took off her shoes and stockings--how delicious the cool, soft velvet of the grass! And now as she rested, the beauty of the scene came to her. Over her the wind moved the leaves. A jay screamed far off, as if answering the cries of the boy. A kingfisher crossed and recrossed the stream with dipping sweep of his wings. The river sang with its lips to the pebbles. The vast clouds went by majestically, far above the treetops, and the snap and buzzing and ringing whir of July insects made a ceaseless, slumberous undertone of song solvent of all else. The tired girl forgot her work. She began to dream. This would not last always. Some one would come to release her from such drudgery. This was her constant, tenderest, and most secret dream. He would have a home. And then she thought of the drug clerk in Rock River who had looked at her-- A voice broke in on her dream, a fresh, manly voice. Just the one I wanted to see! How come--" She remembered her situation, and flushed, looked down at the water, and remained perfectly still. Get onto that horse agin. It was almost noon, and Jack moved reluctantly. He knew the time of day as well as the boy. He made this round after distinct protest. There had never been any special tenderness between them, but she had always liked him. They had been at school together. She wondered why he had come back at this time of the year, and wondered how long he would stay. How long had he stood looking at her? She flushed again at the thought of it. She might have known better. She stood under a little popple tree, whose leaves shook musically at every zephyr, and her eyes through half-shut lids roved over the sea of deep-green glossy leaves, dappled here and there by cloud-shadows, stirred here and there like water by the wind, and out of it all a longing to be free from such toil rose like a breath, filling her throat, and quickening the motion of her heart. Must this go on forever, this life of heat and dust and labor? The girl laid her chin on her strong red wrists, and looked up into the blue spaces between the vast clouds--aerial mountains dissolving in a shoreless azure sea. How cool and sweet and restful they looked! Would she ask him to dinner? He smiled in a frank, boyish way as he hung his hat on the top of a stake and looked up at her. Rob was looking at her thick, fine hair and full Scandinavian face, rich as a rose in color, and did not reply for a few seconds. She stood with her hideous sun bonnet pushed back on her shoulders. A kingbird was chattering overhead. The boy screamed "Dinner!" She colored and smiled a little as she lifted her foot into his huge, hard, sunburned hand. She gave a spring and sat the horse like one at home there. Rob had a deliciously unconscious, abstracted, businesslike air. He really left her nothing to do but enjoy his company, while he went ahead and did precisely as he pleased. Yes, he remembered how they lived in that big, square, dirty, white frame house. It had been three or four years since he had been in it, but the smell of the cabbage and onions, the penetrating, peculiar mixture of odors, assailed his memory as something unforgettable. She said no more, but tried to act as if she were not in any way responsible for what came afterward. As she left them at the well and went to the house, he saw her limp painfully, and the memory of her face so close to his lips as he helped her down from the horse gave him pleasure, at the same time that he was touched by its tired and gloomy look. Peterson came to the door of the kitchen, looking just the same as ever. Broadfaced, unwieldy, flabby, apparently wearing the same dress he remembered to have seen her in years before--a dirty drab-colored thing--she looked as shapeless as a sack of wool. Her English was limited to "How de do, Rob?" At the table he ate heartily of the "bean swaagen," which filled a large wooden bowl in the center of the table, and which was ladled into smaller wooden bowls at each plate. Julia had tried hard to convert her mother to Yankee ways, and had at last given it up in despair. A frown of anger and pain came into her face. She looked at Rob. He stood watching them as they moved out into the road and turned down toward the field. He felt that she had sent him away; but still there was a look in her eyes which was not altogether-- He gave it up in despair at last. He was not good at analyses of this nature; he was used to plain, blunt expressions. He sauntered slowly off up the road after his talk with Julia. His head was low on his breast; he was thinking as one who is about to take a decided and important step.

This excerpt, from Hamlin Garland's short story "Among the Corn-Rows," is an example of local color writing focusing on a different region and culture, that of the American prairie and the farming folk who called it home.

In the gardening world, there are good neighbors and bad neighbors for plants. For instance, onions and carrots live in harmony but peas and onions do not do well together. There are a few good neighbors for corn, both plants benefiting from the proximity. Planting times are also crucial to the success of the crop you plant between corn rows.

Pole Beans The roots of bean plants are deeper than roots on corn stalks, so the plants do not compete in the same soil level. Beans add nitrogen to the soil and corn is a heavy nitrogen feeder, depleting the nutrient from garden soil. The corn also acts as a support for the beans as they grow. Plant the beans when the corn is about 4 to 6 inches tall. Sow four to six bean seeds around each stalk and thin out the weak ones so the healthy bean plants can grow unhindered.

Winter Squash Plant winter squash when you plant the beans. The squash seeds should be planted so there are about three or four corn stalks between each squash plant. As the squash grows, the vines create a mass of foliage that chokes out weeds. The roots on the squash vines are deeper than the corn and beans so there is no competition between the plants. The combination of corn, beans and squash is sometimes referred to as the "Three Sisters" garden.

Cucumbers Cucumbers do well when planted among the corn, because the tall corn plants shade the vines. Cucumbers prefer the cooler temperatures and help retain the moisture in the soil for the corn. The roots of the cucumber vines run slightly deeper into the soil than the corn, so the plants do not compete with each other. Cucumbers like the same growing conditions that corn does and the two thrive together.

Melons Melons need a long growing season, but enjoy the cool shade produced by the tall corn. Melons aid in moisture retention of the soil, while the vines, with large leaves, help choke out any weeds that may harm the corn. You can mix melons, cucumbers and squash between corn plants to increase the garden harvest. Each of the plants is a good neighbor to beans as well as the corn.

Cornrows for kids are of thousands in number. But which are the best among those? Actually, the selection of a cornrows hairstyle is very much confusing, especially for the kids.

Subsequently, this type of hairstyle will spread throughout the rest of Black Africa. The braided hair showed the caste, different life events wedding or death or social rank. To the East, the Maasai to today. The other historical traces, concern the first great African civilizations such as ancient Egypt where the hairstyle symbolized the social rank. Men and women wore different types of hair braids: They were often ornamented with gold thread and other refinements. At that time, hair was granted special care scented oil, lotus flower. This type of braided hair is then observed in many castes of the Egyptian-Nubian population scribes, pharaohs, craftsmen etc. There is an incredible variety of braids according to African countries: Or these young girls from Congo Brazzaville in Another hairstyle to remember; the hull as among women Mangbetu, Congo and Uganda where the skull is deformed to be elongated. The origin of this practice dates back to ancient Egypt, as the famous Mangbetu harp, we also found among the Fang of Gabon, the Azande, cousins of Mangbetu. The conical headgear Zulu women who also inspired the look of Lupita. The braids using twisting hair process: Note also the complexity of braids with often ornamentation that goes against the stereotype that African braids were only a practical pretext. There is an art of braiding in Africa. Here are examples of very elaborates hairstyles like this Fulani girl in Sudan early century with shells and corals as an ornamental. Or that girl from Senegal in Among the girls of Guinea, the complexity of the hair beautifully contrasts with simple placing girls. Also watch this young Moroccan girl in Let us look now at how these affect African hairstyles today, including Caucasian female. Let us add that the popularity of the braids do not date from today. Example below with Marlene Deitrich and Elizabeth Taylor: For her works, Shani Crowe draws braiding style of African American women of the 60s, as well as various existing braids on each region of the African continent. A way for the artist, to honor her cultural identity. A great initiative that we would like to see more often on afro-american celebrities or black models who prefers their weavie or relaxed hair. Note also the approach of Beyonce: She had opted for braids at the time of the first anniversary of her daughter Blue Ivy, for Thanksgiving in and also during his trip to Cuba with her husband Jay Z.

The movie, written and directed by Donald P. Had you seen the original movie, or did you watch it once you landed this job? When I got the script, I did go out and find it and watch it, just so that I had some kind of reference point. And I knew that the script we were going to be shooting was going to favor more the Stephen King story and less the version. So I did want to know where those differences were going to lie. But I did watch it, and it was creepy. I can imagine how creepy it was in What interested you about Vicky as a character, as an acting challenge? I got to play this woman, this disappointed and for the most part infuriated woman. It was so different from being on Battlestar. And I got to be pretty. And I got to be feminine. And I got to be kind of obnoxious. So it was a lot of fun. How far does this movie push things as far as the violence, gore and fear factor? It is pretty gory. But the stuff with the kids is really what creeps me out. But there is a lot of gore. Did you shoot more intense alternate versions of some of the money shots, so that they can be included as part of an R-rated or even unrated DVD version? As far as I know, I think that was the plan. Donald had spoken about a possible overseas theatrical release. So there were certain shots that, yeah, there was the Disney versionâ€”the TV versionâ€”and the theatrical version of what it was going to be. The original film spawned about 92 sequels. How open would you be to returning as Vicky in a series of follow-ups? Is it OK if I say not so much? The only place I could go would be to be a zombie, but then it would be a zombie movie.

He goes to town dressed up and leaves among general hilarity to find a wife in Wanpac. 2. Rob goes to the farm of Mr. Peterson, a Norwegian who makes his daughter (who Rob knows as a youth) work the plow.

Richard Nixon was in the White House, deeply embroiled in the Watergate scandal that would topple him the following year. US involvement in the Vietnam War had officially ended, the withdrawal of troops weakening south Vietnamese forces. By , they too would succumb. George Lucas, a little-known writer-director from California, had the antidote. His semi-autobiographical movie about hot rods and cruising culture opened in August of , bathing moviegoers in neon nostalgia. Now, 40 years on, in a sleepy suburb of Langley, British Columbia, a deep-black Chevy coughs like an old Kodiak disturbed from his winter hibernation. The starter motor whirrs once, twice, three times. There is a fitful grumble, a staccato series of backfires and then a deep, ursine bellow as the big-block V8 comes alive. Owner John VanWerkhoven guides the beast out onto the road in front of his house to join a bright yellow Ford five-window coupe. The project cars are a realisation of his teenage fantasy – that of being a hot-rodder. He has lived in Langley all his life and remembers the old hot-rodding haunts, the farm roads where illicit late-night grudge matches were settled among the corn rows. A grandfather now, and with all six kids out of the house, he finally has the time to indulge his car obsessions – trained as a hammer-in-hand framer, VanWerkhoven was born to build things. He also owns a scary-fast street-rod, sitting up on a hoist in the garage, but creating it was just prologue to his Graffiti habit. In the movie, a group of friends spend a night cruising the streets of a fictionalised version of Modesto, California, each on the cusp of adulthood. Meanwhile, Richard Dreyfuss plays Curt Henderson, a high school graduate caught between the desire to stay and the beckoning lure of an Eastern scholarship. His friend, Steve Bolander as portrayed by Ron Howard, is committed to leaving the next day, and throughout the night undergoes his own crisis of faith over leaving his high school sweetheart behind. Henderson pursues a mysterious, unattainable blonde driving a white Ford Thunderbird. While the plot interweaves the stories of each of the characters, American iron circles endlessly, firing away on all eight cylinders. Dreyfuss, Ford, and Lucas would all, of course, become household names. Howard is preparing to release the highly anticipated feature film Rush this September, a story of two giants of Formula 1 racing in the s. It was the cars of American Graffiti, however, that carried the real star power – and the two lined up on this unassuming side road are as close to the originals as they come. The Ford is especially detailed, right down to the order of the rings on the Covico steering wheel and the camera mounts out front. A JFK medallion hangs from the mirror, just as it did in the film. Originally from the Midwest, this replica car was likely used for oval track racing, VanWerkhoven says, before its transformation into a cinematic homage. With their attuned ears, some old hot-rodders claim that at certain points in the film, it is clear that the car never quite runs correctly. The sole survivor of both movies escaped the crusher and the pyrotechnics department, passing into the hands of Travers. Today, though, faithful tributes to each sit side-by-side on the quiet street, the jacked-up front suspension of the Chevy giving it the appearance of leaping off the line. Neighbours arrive with their cameras; people walking their dogs stop to chat and stare. Henderson chooses to leave. Bolander chooses to stay. As Goodnight Sweetheart, Goodnight by the Spaniels plays softly in the background, Curt looks down from his window seat in the climbing airliner to see that elusive phantom Thunder Bird rolling along an empty highway. A single title card set against a blue background shows that there is no clean, happy ending to this slice of innocence. It might happen later in the year, or perhaps early in the spring of , but VanWerkhoven is talking with the local dragstrip about using both cars in a heads-up run during a race weekend.
