Vidhyarathi What is literature? What is relationship between literature and life? Hudson says that the word literature is loosely used in everyday communication. In common sense, literature means whatever that is written or printed. It is really difficult to differentiate literature from mere documents. There are some books such as railway guide or manual of cookery which provides the information about some specific subjects, whereas some books like The Paradise Lost or Sartor Resartus appeals to our heart. He says that the critic like Charles Lamb does not consider works of Hume, Gibbon, and, Josephus as literature, whereas the critic like Hallam considers even the books of theology or medicine as literature. So there is no concrete criterion for making true literature different from mere writings. These three features are: General Human Interest This refers to the portrayal of essential human experiences magnetizing all irrespective of time, age, and place. The work of literature does not appeal to particular mass of the people of particular era, but touches the hearts of all from whatever corner of the world. A work of literature is not gender-biased or time bound; it appeals to young and old, literate or illiterate. Thus a work of literature always has subject-matter of general human interest, where as mere writing is useful to particular group of the people and is always time bound. Element of Form Hudson is of the opinion that element of form is an essential factor that constitutes literature. Mere writing does have particular form but this type of form does not provide artistic pleasure, whereas form of literary work pleases the hearts of readers. In poetic form the use of rhyming schemes, meters and figurative language makes reading pleasant. Form of literary work changes from writer to writer except fourteen lines of sonnet , on other hand mere writing has fixed format. Thus a work of literature has element of form which imparts pleasure. Aesthetic pleasure is hallmark of good literature. It is thus fundamentally an expression of life through the medium of language. Literature is nothing else but an important record of what men have perceived in the world. In literature, the writer artistically reports his experiences of life; he gives words to those interesting incidents of life which have general human interest. Literature is an artistic expression of the best that is known and thought in the world. As literature is product of life, while reading it we are brought in large, close, and, fresh revelation of most enduring aspects of life. To conclude, we can say that Hudson believes that literature is literary product of life. Thus, in the opening of the first chapter, he defines literature, gives concrete criteria that make literature and finally he convinces us to believe that there is direct relation between literature and life.
