We all sneeze on occasion for what is seemingly no reason. As you might imagine, If your cat sneezes once in a while, and is otherwise active and normal, it is probably nothing to worry about. A simple, benign tickle This may be the most obvious cause for sneezing. Think of the animated cat that sneezes when he inhales a bit of pepper. This kind of sneezing is not unlike scratching a tickle or an itch. Respiratory infections Another common cause of sneezing is associated with a respiratory infection , most often a viral infection. Likely infectious diseases include: Herpes virus Chlamydia infections Bacterial infections such as Mycoplasma Less commonly seen fungal infections can also cause sinus disease that results in nasal inflammation. Viral respiratory infections may be accompanied by a cough and even more commonly by excessive tearing or discharge accumulating in the eyes. Chemical irritants On occasion a noxious smell or chemical fumes associated with various solvents can produce inflammation of the membranes of the nose and sinuses. Some cats can also be sensitive to inhaled tobacco smoke, perfumes and various chemicals. Foreign bodies Nasal foreign bodies such as blades of grass or grass awns can find their way into the nasal cavity. Dental disease Dental disease can cause sneezing particularly involving root infections. Infections of the feline tooth can allow bacteria to establish in the nasal sinus with resulting inflammation and sneezing. Allergies to pollens Pollen allergies are much less common in cats than in people, but are not unheard of either. Intranasal vaccines Vaccines that fight against respiratory infections frequently cause sneezing for a few days after they are administered. The sneezing generally lasts for only a few days and goes away on its own, requiring no treatment. If your cat sneezes only occasionally, no treatment is generally needed. However, if your cat has other symptoms such as discharge from the nose and eyes, the presence of blood or mucus in the nose, decreased activity or loss of appetite, have your cat examined by your veterinarian. If you have any questions or concerns, you should always visit or call your veterinarian – they are your best resource to ensure the health and well-being of your pets.

They are very loving and they are very independent. If you find that your cat who has been litter box trained for some time starts pooping on the floor, there are a few ways that you can get him to stop. Check the Placement of His Litter Box The first thing that you should do if your cat is pooping on the floor is to make sure that the litter box is placed right. If you have a large house and only one litter box, that could be the problem. If your cat cannot get to a litter box fast enough, he might just go on the floor. You may need multiple litter boxes placed around the house to keep him from pooping on the floor. Finally, if his litter box is in a high-traffic area, he might not want to use it. Most cats like their privacy when they go to the bathroom. As mentioned above, cats are clean animals. They prefer the place that they do their business to be clean. The problem could also be with the litter. Some cats are very picky about their litter. If you are using a rock litter, try switching to sand. Finally, check the litter box itself. If the litter box has a cover, try taking it off. Do You Have Multiple Cats? If you have more than one cat, you should have more than one litter box in the home. If your cat needs to poop and there is another cat in the box, the cat might not be able to wait. Also, if the other cats have left a big mess in the litter box, the cat might not want to go in. Instead, he will use the floor. Multiple cat homes need to have multiple litter boxes. This will only make him afraid of you. When you find the poop, you should go get him. Even if he is in his cat bed, you should wake him up and let him see what he did. When you pick up the poop, you should put it back in the litter box. This will show him where his poop is supposed to go. You need to be patient with him if he is pooping on the floor. You may need to show him a few times if he keeps pooping on the floor. Cleaning the Mess Cleaning up after your cat after he has pooped on the floor is very important. The next time he needs to poop, he will likely go back to the same spot. To clean the mess, as mentioned above, you should put the poop in the litter box while you cat watches. Next, use a cat stain vacuum cleaner like Bissell SpotBot Pet to clean any small pieces that were left behind. Next, make sure that you wash the area with a cleaner that is designed to remove odors. You can find a good cleaner in the cleaning product aisle of your local supermarket. You can also go to the pet store and buy a product that is made especially for cleaning up messes made by cats. There is likely a good reason for this change in his behavior. The best way to solve the problem is to figure out why he is pooping on the floor so that you can make the necessary changes. But you need to get rid of outside stray dogs and cats using latest pet repellent only.

Manage the cat litter box in your absence What can happen when a cat is home alone? According to many people, cats can stay several days at home alone. However, it is not very advisable to do so because you can run some risks. Usually, those who leave their cat at home alone for a long time, buy a much larger water bowl than their normal bowl. However it is possible that your cat will not accept this new object and not recognize it as their own; refusing to drink or throwing water on the floor. To avoid this, we recommend you to add 1 to 3 bowls of extra water to be put elsewhere in the house. Do the same with the food bowl and never change it before a prolonged absence. Another option is to buy a bowl that gives automatic water and food to the cat. This is to teach the cat how to use it and get used to doing it. Another situation that can occur in your absence, if your cat likes to hide, is that they may run the risk of being locked in a closet and unable to escape. For the reasons given, we do not recommend you to leave a cat for more than a day. The ideal would be to ask a friend or relative to go to your house. They can make sure that the cat is well, to feed and play with them and avoid them suffering from separation anxiety. The age and personality of the cat If you are away from home for more than 2 or 3 days, we want you to consider the following factors to avoid your cat from getting sick or feeling lonely. Young cats that are already used to spending a day without you at home, will have no problem if everything remains as usual, as if it were a normal day. It is part of proper cat training to ensure that they get used to your absence during the day. There are cats, however, who do not want to spend even a minute in the house alone. This depends on several factors but, in particular, by incorrect education. The cat should be accustomed to being alone, initially for a few minutes then passing hours. Enriching the environment where they live will help them to remain engaged and be distracted from your absence too. Adult cats are the ones that get used to your absence more easily, especially if they were left alone when they were younger. But, given their average degree of activity, they should receive a visit once a day or every two days. Older cats are probably the ones most in need of assistance and who might need two visits per day. In this case it would be appropriate to ask someone to take care of them full-time or at least visit them several times a day. Adapting to their needs is critical to ensure you have a happy cat. There are cats very attached to their owner and others who prefer that a certain routine to be happy, such as receiving a wet food ration is respected. In severe cases, such as aggressive or territorial cats, you should think about how to manage visits from those who will feed them. The ideal method is to present these people to the cat in the days before your departure so that the animal views them positively. Manage the cat litter box in your absence Another aspect you must not overlook is that of cleaning the litter box. When it is very dirty, most cats stop using it. Cats are demanding animals in terms of cleanliness and hygiene. So, one option would be to leave litter boxes in several different places, so that they have a few options to go to the toilet. However, if someone goes to your house every day, you will not need to. If you want to know more about litter training your cat, read our AnimalWised article. A dirty litter box can lead to other problems, such as the cat, not wanting to dirty other places, therefore holding in their pee. If they do this they are at risk of urinary infections. This or other conditions may also affect a healthy cat who has never had health problems. If you want to read more articles similar to How long can you leave a cat alone?
