Monday, 11 April Last Updated: These churches are attached to the Clarion Presbytery, embracing the counties of Clarion, Elk, and Jefferson, and the parts of Forest and Venango counties lying east of the Allegheny River. The presbytery is included in the Synod of Pennsylvania, which is composed of all the presbyteries of Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and the presbyteries of Mexico and Zacatecas, old Mexico, and all are under the jurisdiction of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America, consisting of twenty - six synods and about , members. Both churches are said to have been organized in John McPherrin preached probably the first sermon that was delivered in all this section, and it is known that he organized New Rehoboth Church in He probably organized Licking about the same time. Their first pastor was the Rev. Robert McGarrough, having been sent as a licentiate of Redstone Presbytery in the spring of He began his labors in these churches in June of the same year, but was not ordained and installed until Coming to this wilderness, carrying his family and all his worldly goods on a pack-horse, he occupied a rude cabin built of round logs, twelve or fifteen feet square, for some years, in the midst of the forest, where woodland paths served for roads, and where neighbors were sparsely scattered over the hills and valleys of his extended field of labor. He supported himself largely by cultivating a small patch of cleared land during week days, while on the Sabbath he ministered to the spiritual wants of his little band of Christians, until , when his relation as pastor of these churches was dissolved. During this period Mr. McGarrough organized Concord Church in Perry township in , Richland about ; Callensburg Church was organized about He continued his labors at Concord and Callensburg until , shortly before his death. The three first named were the earliest churches of any denomination organized within the limits of this county. John Glenn, and Rev. Barrett were prominent among the ministers who served the Presbyterian churches in this county prior to The county being thinly settled, divine services were held at the houses of members, some living near Cherry Run, and others on Licking. In a few years a log school - house was built On Cherry Run, and the members used it as a place of meeting. In a congregation was organized, and designated as the Associate Congregation of Cherry Run. Joseph Rankin and Clemens Davidson were chosen ruling elders, and Rev. Dicky preached as a "supply" until , when Rev. James McCarrell took charge. In the place of meeting was changed to Rimersburg, where a log building was erected for a meeting - house. This building remained until , when the present house of worship was built. McCarrell remained pastor of the congregation until , when he was released. In July, , Rev. John McAuley was ordained, and installed pastor of the congregation. He continued in this relation until August, After spending the years of his life in ministerial labors, principally in Clarion county, he died at Sligo, Pa. Seventy - seventh year of his age. The Presbytery of Clarion was organized on the 4th of July, , and consisted of four ministers, viz.: The congregations within the limits of this county are Cherry Run, at Rimersburg, Hermon, near Smithland, and Upper Piney, in the vicinity of Mechanicsville. The last has no congregational organization at present. The old building in which services were held is still standing, and is known as the "Seceder Church. Robert Bruce has been pastor of the congregation at Rimersburg since , and of the congregation of Hermon since Both these congregations are under the care of Clarion Presbytery, subordinate to the Synod of North America. William Shadrach is the oldest living Baptist minister of Western Pennsylvania. Almost sixty years ago he was associated with Deacon Abraham Shallenberger, father of J. Lloyd, of Clarion borough, at Mount Pleasant, Pa. Shadrach was intimately associated with the ministers and members of the Clarion Association. He was with the body when it was divided, and when the Indiana Association was formed. In the undivided association met in Brookville; in with Zion Church, now Reidsburgh. character. Thomas are among the pioneer ministers, the last named, father of Dr. Thomas, now of Clarion county, and for more than thirty years an active minister. Some of these early preachers had piety and power, although not favored with a classical education. Men living now speak of Thomas E. Thomas as a wonderful preacher. The grandson of this same man, with collegiate and theological training, is pastor of a church in Cleveland, Ohio. There are seven Baptist churches in Clarion county, with an aggregate membership of nearly six hundred. These churches belong to the Clarion Association, embracing a part of Jefferson, Armstrong, and Butler counties. The association comprises nineteen churches and 1, members. The State Association, made up from these local bodies, meets once a year. The National gathering, made up from the States of the Union, convenes once a year to transact business that directly interests , regular Baptists in the United States. A large portion of these were confirmed members of the Reformed Church. John William Weber the pioneer Reformed minister in Western Pennsylvania, who, in , came to Westmoreland county, and later was the first regular minister of any kind in Pittsburgh, in the early years of this century occasionally visited the scattered members of the Reformed Church in Armstrong, Butler, Venango, and other counties, conducted services, baptized the children, and held communions. As he was then already nearly eighty years of age, the labor and exposure of these missionary journeys were too great for him. As early as requests were sent from Western Pennsylvania to the synod of the Reformed Church for a young minister or ministers to be sent out to assist the aged pastor. In response to the request, in Henry Hublistor and William Weinel, licentiates of the synod, were sent to Westmoreland and adjacent counties, the latter visiting the territory now in Clarion county. This led to the demand for more ministers in this section. In response to this call two of Rev. Hacke and Henry Koch, offered themselves; and in the spring of set out on horse - back from Northampton county for their long and tedious journey over the mountains. On entering Greensbury, Westmoreland county, they were surprised and disheartened to hear only the English language spoken on the streets. Mother Drum, a venerable matron of Greensbury, however, allayed their fears by assuring them that the surrounding country element was quite German enough to make their labors in that language acceptable, and no doubt useful. Student Hacke, then not twenty years old, preached in a number of organized congregations in that county, and, was chosen for their pastor, which holy office he filled for a period of fifty - eight years. Student Koch traveled northward to Armstrong and Venango counties, where he found no organized congregations, but a number of members of the Reformed Church, many of them from his native county. After a canvass of the field, he and his fellow student, Hacke, returned to the East and continued their studies a short time. Koch presented himself before the synod, which met in the city of Lancaster September 5, , as a candidate for license and ordination: As there were no regular organized congregations here to extend a call, it is recorded in the minutes of synod that "communications were received from Venango and adjacent counties requesting that a young man named Koch be admitted to the ministry. In the fall of the same year he pitched his tent in what is now Clarion county, and began his labor of love and self - denial among the scattered German - speaking inhabitants. One of the first persons he baptized, if not the first, north of the Clarion River, is still living. Her name is Mrs. About this time the St. At both these places there were log school - houses, in which worship was held in winter. During summer services were held in the open air. The difficulties he had to encounter can easily be inferred. The work he accomplished may be hinted at by giving some of his statistical reports recorded in the minutes of synod. In he reported baptisms, communicants, and 6 deaths. In he reported 4 congregations, baptized, 39 confirmed, communicants, 5 deaths, and 2 schools. From these and other known facts it is safe to infer that during his pastorate of over a quarter of a century he baptized at least from 1, to 2, persons, and confirmed many hundreds, in addition to the other official duties of his ministry. He also supplied, in a large measure, the membership of the Lutheran Church, who were in an early day visited and supplied by a minister of their own church from a distance. In this classis was given permission to unite with the synod of Ohio and adjacent States. At a meeting of the Ohio Synod in Canton, O. The first meeting of this division, by appointment of synod, was held at St. Johns, near Mount Pleasant, Pa. At a meeting held in Armstrong county in , Rev. Koch was present and earnestly requested that classes should meet in his charge, which was finally agreed to, and St. In the synod of Ohio granted the pastors and charges north of the Kiskiminetas River, and belonging to the Westmoreland classis, permission to organize a new division to be called the Clarion Classis. Koch, the faithful servant, who had stood by his flock so long, and endured so many hardships in the service there, had to leave with tears in his eyes. He did not consider himself competent to officiate in the English language. As the congregation was unable to support a minister alone, for a short time the members were as sheep without a shepherd. This led in the beginning of to the organization of Jerusalem Congregation, Rimersburg, and also a few years later led to the organization of the Salem Congregation in Limestone township. Thus the wrath of man was made to praise God in the establishing of new congregations. During the pastorates of Hoffman, Leberman, and Wolff, the transition from the German to the English language set in with great force in this section. And as is generally the case in every new movement, there were extremists on the side of progress, as also on the side of conservation; and the extremists on either side do not generally sympathize, with the other side. Only those who have passed through such a crisis can fully appreciate what is here so briefly referred to. Some of the old German - speaking people honestly believed that the perpetuation of true religion depended on the use of the mother - tongue, while many of the progressives went to the extreme in insisting that all would be lost to the cause of Christianity if the English alone was not used. In some instances on both sides there were bitter prejudices, false pride, and narrowness of judgment and other things, that for these pages shall be left nameless. Another matter in the Reformed Church was also bitterly contested.

One of his first acts was to petition for the enlargement of the parsonage house - see here for the history of the Rectory. In and he published collections of his sermons, including The Great Benefit of a Good Example, on Matthew 5. Their strategy was to use the existing criminal justice system and engineer prosecutions, for which they met the cost - over 94, they claimed, in the first thirty years of their activity, before their influence waned - as well as to press for changes in the law. A Fellow of Brasenose, he was ordained in and served his title at Chalgrove with Berrick Salome in Oxford diocese a post in which his brother William followed him five years later - he later became Rector of Wooton Rivers, in Wiltshire, another Brasenose living, where he died advanced in years before further curacies in Stratford-le-Bow, Whitechapel and Spitalfields. Also under this will, until he and George Barnes were jointly Lords of the Manor of Icklingham Berners in Suffolk, and separately or together held manorial courts there on various occasions. His wife Mary, daughter of William Paggen, a surgeon from Eltham, lived until They had two daughters, Rebecca and Jane, and two sons, Charles, who was ordained he assisted his father here from time to time - see below and was the first professor of Anglo-Saxon at Oxford, and Paggen-William, who was a physician, as were other family members including another Herbert, a physiologist and surgeon who in the s wrote about clairvoyance and vampirism. See more about family members here. Here are the full texts of two contrasting obituaries. But, not to diverge too far into general panegyric, it is meant to enlarge upon this exemplary character, with regard to its most appropriate excellence, as it exhibits a singular specimen of the good effects resulting to society from a plain and vigorous understanding, actuated by right principles, and applied to practicable and beneficial objects. Lecturers From the start, the parish appointed a Lecturer - an ordained preacher, chosen by the Vestry meeting and supported by the voluntary contributions of the congregation. Huxley, a fellow of Brasenose, was from an old Cheshire family - his father was a merchant in Macclesfield; he died in post at the age of Later he was Rector of Kingston Bagpuize, then Berkshire [now Oxfordshire], until his death in He was the father of the man of letters Leigh Hunt, and published his juvenile writings. He died in Samuel Bethell was a relative of Rector Mayo. He was appointed Lecturer alongside his main job, as curate of Christ Church Spitalfields, and continued there until he became Rector of Clayton-cum-Kymer in Sussex yet another Brasenose living in His successor as Lecturer was James Blenkarne s, having officiated in the parish from He was president of Sion College in Aged 78, the Rev. He was educated at the grammar school of Ashby de la Zouche, in Leicestershire, from whence he proceeded in, with an exhibition to Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and graduated B. His intrinsic worth procured for him a variety of appointments, in each of which he became extensively useful, and from each of which he retired with dignity and honour. In he was elected Lecturer of St. During a continued acquaintance of almost forty years, they looked upon him with increasing affection and esteem; and on his recent retirement from this office they presented him with a valuable silver waiter as a public memorial of their respect. About the same time he received a similar testimonial of a tea and coffee service from the parishioners of St. In the several relations of a Minister of the Gospel, a father, a husband, and a friend, he evinced an uniform desire to advance the happiness, and secure the love of all with whom he was connected. His private and social conduct as a man was characterized by a primitive mildness and simplicity, and an unassuming humility of deportment, accompanied with that evenness and chastised cheerfulness of temper, which is the result, and the evidence, of conscious innocence and integrity. Curates R or P Rowland, reappearing in as an officiant at weddings: All of these parishes were then in the diocese of London. The Revd Mr Archer, an eccentric clericus but of some poetic talent, wrote an elegy on his death. He later also held two Lincolnshire rectories - St Stephen Carlby from where he died in, and Anderby with Comberworth from, and was commissioner of the peace for the soke of Peterborough. Among his published sermons were At the assizes for Cambridge, , from Matt. They who aim to mark the limits of knowledge, and the boundaries within which each branch of science is confined, are doing an essential service to the cause of truth and religion. They prevent much of that uncertainty and delusion which disturbs the minds of the people at large; who without such assistance are "ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. The evils which may arise to the constitution of Great Britain from the influence of a too powerful nobility, considered in a sermon, preached before the University of Cambridge on Friday, May 29, Others went to Ireland, where there was a Huguenot community in Lisburn: Here he preached that Catholicism led to arbitrary rule, violence and foreign councils. What is the story here? See Baby on her Back William J. DuBourdieu , republished for a family history. Anthony Thomas was a graduate of Jesus College Oxford, ordained priest in at Whitchurch in the diocese of St Asaph, where he was curate of Guilsfield, Montgomeryshire before coming to London and serving here briefly. Gabriel Tahourdin was also from a family of Huguenot origins which from the 18th to the early 20th centuries produced several generations of parsons, as well as lawyers and merchants. After Winchester School Gabriel attended Corpus Christi College Oxford as did his brother, who was also ordained , and began his ministry here. He died in predeceased by his wife three years earlier as Rector of Hannington, near Swindon, and perpetual curate for 43 years of Bentley and Frensham, near Farnham, the duties of which, during all that period, he personally discharged with zeal and piety New Monthly Magazine vol See the Proceedings of the Huguenot Society of London vol. His namesake father had been curate of Brighthurst cum Great Easton and Drayton in Leicestershire from , and vicar from ; on his death in his son succeeded him in this post, until his own death in In Great Easton church are memorial tablets to two of his daughters, Mary and Rebecca - the latter the ever dear and beloved object of the esteem and friendship of William Wignall, who erected it. Later he became the seventh vicar of St Anne Soho , where he died at the age of His grand-daughter Lady Caithness produced some Recollections of his life. He wore knee breeches, buckle shoes and a tricorne hat over his powdered hair, and took snuff; and as an old man lapsed into his childhood Gaelic for his prayers. Peach beautiful wiseacre wants to have the curacy of Overton; and if he does leave Wootton, James Digwell wishes to go there. This did not happen, but her description of him is intriguing! Through marriage connections with the Shaw and Gwilt families he had become the lessee of the estate of Cheshunt Great House which had originally been in the possession of Cardinal Wolsey, and was built in similar style to Hampton Court , and its owner in Was he related to Colonel Herbert Jeffreys, acting governor of Virginia a century earlier? John Hutchins, of which the British Critic vol 26, p said The pious founder of this annual sermon required Instructions to be given on the excellency and use of the Liturgy of the Church of England, shewing that great advantages must necessarily accrue to the poor children educated in the doctrines and principles of the said church. This is a very sensible and pious discourse, in which suitable and forcible arguments are introduced; and the object for which the sermon was instituted, effectually answered. Other posts provided an income, and maybe a house: He was from an old Lancashire family; his father William, who died in , had been simultaneously Rector of Warrington and Vicar of Leigh. He was the youngest of eight sons, three of whom served with the East India Company one of whom, Edward, died of yellow fever at the age of Here is an example, mentioning Robert, from volume 5, chapter LXX [full text here]: He said if Spain can be roused Lord Wellesley will do it; that He is effecting a great alteration in the management of their affairs, and that a considerable military force is preparing to be sent to Spain to support such measures as He may recommend. He was ordained by the Bishop of Oxford in , and in served a curacy at New Windsor, Berks in the diocese of Salisbury. Whenever he went away, he took his plate-chest with him and had all the locks on his cupboards changed. However, the parish registers suggest that Farington was more active than his curate implies, despite his eccentricities: He was buried, along with other family members, at Broxbourne where, incidentally, the News International presses, previously in this parish, were relocated in - a tablet there records the details. usual terms. Wood will have much pleasure, in referring to the Parents of these Young Gentlemen, whom he has now under his tuition. William Quekett - see above, here for his time at Christ Church Watney Street and here for a selection of extracts from his autobiography. Henry began his Oxford studies at Balliol before becoming attached to Brasenose College; he succeeded W. Robertson, whose Life and Letters refer to discussions with Churton at a time when his own theological views were shifting, and who at Trinity Chapel Brighton became one of the great humane preachers of the age. All he gave me in return, said Quekett, was the empty cash box. During his brief time here Churton officiated at 54 baptisms and 5 weddings, returning as a visitor to baptize 13 candidates in February. He also published various sermons. Bryan King The last Fellow of Brasenose College to be appointed Rector was Bryan King - the college later transferred most of their East End patronage to the Bishop of London in exchange for various country livings. When he arrived, he noted that the four streets within which my parish is situated contained houses - of which 27 were public houses, 13 beer houses, and no fewer than were brothels. The church, he found, scared off the poor, who with their timid delicacy ever shrink from entering. It would be as reasonable to assure such that they would be perfectly welcome as guests in Buckingham Palace. His 45, parishioners were of those very classes who are, alas, almost universally alienated from attendance upon the services of the Church. So he sought to rise to the challenge. His story is more fully told in connection with the Ritualism Riots, and the establishment of the mission led by Charles Lowder. He was born in, and in married Martha Mary, daughter of Thomas Fardell DCL, the Rector of Boothby Pagnell in Lincolnshire, who conducted services here from time to time when his son-in-law was under stress. Worn out by the riots, he exchanged livings with John Ross Lockhart and became vicar of Avebury; he retired in - by which time he was almost totally deaf, and his curate son ran the parish - and died in. This was his first post; after two further curacies he became incumbent of Stapleford in Wiltshire, and in of two parishes in Christchurch, New Zealand. Charles Edward Band, though he was only briefly here as a curate, is an interesting and complex example of how clergy deployment changed during the 19th century. His grandfather Edward Wright Band, of Wookey House, Wells which remained the family home after his death in was a magistrate for Somerset - his father had been High Sheriff of the county in - and a former Captain in its militia. But a note, dated 16 April, on the back of his licence states Whereas the Reverend Charles Edward Band, having been non-resident on his Rectory of Combrawleigh [sic] in the County of Devon and our Diocese under Licence, has declared his intention of returning to Residence: Charles senior had married Henrietta Bourke in she died, as did his second wife, Harriott [sic] Louisa, of scarlet fever aged 26 soon after her confinement. In presumably after his brief time here he was appointed Rector of Langton-on-Swale, Northallerton, in the diocese of Ripon, where the patron was the Hon. Documents of show that he continued to hold this office, but also held curacies in Croydon - at St Saviour from and then at St Michael. He is not to be confused with his namesake W. Bennett - see below. Charles Lowder and his many colleagues at the mission were licensed as curates to the parish, and most officiated at the parish church as well as in the mission centres. On his release, he established a school for 25 boys in Ulley, before his time here: In he became perpetual curate of St Jude Whitechapel, created in as a chapel of ease to St Mary Whitechapel and, ironically, from the parish of the great reforming parson Samuel Barnett - the church was demolished in. His wife Anne died in
