Overview. Below you will find sample annotations from annotated bibliographies, each with a different research project. Remember that the annotations you include in your own bibliography should reflect your research project and/or the guidelines of your assignment.

Annotated bibliographies of web sources can be particularly useful because of the myriad of pages associated with one website. The bibliography will steer you back to the page you sourced, and the annotation will remind you what information you gathered from that page. Annotated bibliographies begin with the bibliographic citation, followed by your annotation. MLA style does not require URLs in bibliographic citations, but for an annotated bibliography, you might want to include it so you can easily find the site again. The date accessed goes in day-month-year format. The URL is encased in angle brackets, and there is a period at the end. To add the annotation, drop down two lines after your bibliographic citation. Write your annotation in paragraph form. MLA style requires text to be double spaced. Keep the entire paragraph indented, so your paragraphs are flush with the hanging indent in your second and any subsequent lines in your bibliography; only the first line of your bibliography is fully to the left margin of the paper. Drop down an extra line between paragraphs in your annotation. How to tell a sociopath from a psychopath. Since an article is a common format, you do not need a format description bracket. If, however, the page is a blog post or lecture notes, for example, you should indicate that in brackets after the title. Drop down two lines after your bibliographic citation and begin your annotation. APA style also dictates double-spacing to be maintained throughout the annotation. Separate the annotation into paragraphs for each section, such as a separate paragraph for the summary and another paragraph for the evaluation. Your annotation can be up to three paragraphs. Accessed March 11, Drop down two lines after your citation and begin writing your annotation, which follows the same indentation as APA and MLA styles. Do not italicize or add extra indentations. Your annotation could be just one paragraph, or it could be up to three paragraphs, separated by sections -- summary, evaluation, and usefulness to your research. Harvard Style Harvard style requires URL and date accessed information in your bibliographic citation. The information you include varies, depending on what kind of website you cite. For example, to cite a blog post like this: Hibnick, E , Lawyers moonlighting as entrepreneurs. Harvard style puts the website in angle brackets and ends the citation with a period. Harvard style differs from the other guides, requiring single-spacing within a paragraph. You should still add a double space after your citation, followed by your single-spaced paragraphs. Keep your indentation flush to the left, and add a double space in between paragraphs. As with the other styles, your annotation can be up to three paragraphs. Cite this Article A tool to create a citation to reference this article Cite this Article.

An annotated bibliography is a collection of sources you put together, listed in a proper citation format with a summary or comment on the mentioned source included.

This example is based on the APA style guide, but your instructor might give you other formatting instructions. Many annotations evaluate the quality of scholarship in a book or article. Your findings can be positive, negative, or mixed. Your professor might also want you to explain why the source is relevant to your assignment. The evolution and impact of child benefits. Eds , A question of commitment: Wilfrid Laurier University Press. Ken Battle draws on his research as an extensively-published policy analyst, and a close study of some government documents, to explain child benefits in Canada. He outlines some fundamental assumptions supporting the belief that all society members should contribute to the upbringing of children. His comparison of Canadian child poverty rates to those in other countries provides a useful wake-up to anyone assuming Canadian society is doing a good job of protecting children from want. He pays particular attention to the National Child Benefit NCB , arguing that it did not deserve the criticism it received from politicians and journalists. However, Battle relies too heavily on his own work; he is the sole or primary author of almost half the sources in his bibliography. However, Battle does offer a valuable source for this essay, because the chapter provides a concise overview of government-funded assistance currently available to parents. This offers context for analyzing the scope and financial reality of child poverty in Canada. Child poverty and family structure in Canada, Journal of Comparative Family Studies, 34 3 , Sociology professors Kerr and Beaujot analyze the demographics of impoverished families. They analyze child poverty rates in light of these demographic factors, as well as larger Rules! The text and the reference list should be double-spaced. Numbering starts on the title page, at the top right of the page. Reference list entries must have a hanging indent to do this in Microsoft Word , click Format, then Paragraph, then Special, and choose Hanging. There should be 1 inch 2. Use Times Roman font, or a similar serif font. Each paragraph should be indented.

Some of your courses at Ashford University will require you to write an Annotated Bibliography. An Annotated Bibliography is a working list of references—books, journal articles, online documents, websites, etc. The purpose of the annotation is to inform the reader of the relevance, accuracy, and quality of the sources cited, and to state how this source will be used in or relevant to the paper or project. Thus, an Annotated Bibliography has two main parts: Research the required number of scholarly sources from the library for your project. Reference each source in APA format. For help on how to format each source, see our sample references list. Write two paragraphs under each source: The first paragraph is a short summary of the article in your own words. The second paragraph is a short discussion of how this source supports your paper topic. What does this source provide that reinforces the argument or claim you are making? This support may be statistics, expert testimony, or specific examples that relate to your focused topic. While a bibliography is just a list of sources used when researching a topic, an annotated bibliography adds a summary and evaluation of each source, such as a description of the intended audience and the benefit of the source to your own research.

When printing this page, you must include the entire legal notice. This material may not be published, reproduced, broadcast, rewritten, or redistributed without permission. Use of this site constitutes acceptance of our terms and conditions of fair use. An Annotated Bibliography Holland, Suzanne. Science, Ethics, and Public Policy. This is the annotation of the above source, which is formatted according to MLA 8th ed. If one were really writing an annotation for this source, one would offer a brief summary of what this book says about stem cell research. After a brief summary, it would be appropriate to assess this source and offer some criticisms of it. Does it seem like a reliable and current source? Is the research biased or objective? Are the facts well documented? Who is the author? Is she qualified in this subject? Is this source scholarly, popular, some of both? The length of your annotation will depend on the assignment or on the purpose of your annotated bibliography. After summarizing and assessing, you can now reflect on this source. How does it fit into your research? Is this a helpful resource? Since "stem cell research" is a very broad topic, has this source helped you to narrow your topic? Not all annotations have to be the same length. For example, this source is a very short scholarly article. It may only take a sentence or two to summarize. Even if you are using a book, you should only focus on the sections that relate to your topic. Not all annotated bibliographies assess and reflect; some merely summarize. That may not be the most helpful for you, but, if this is an assignment, you should always ask your instructor for specific guidelines. Using a variety of sources can help give you a broader picture of what is being said about your topic. You may want to investigate how scholarly sources are treating this topic differently than more popular sources. But again, if your assignment is to only use scholarly sources, then you will probably want to avoid magazines and popular web sites. The bibliographic information above is proper MLA format use whatever style is appropriate in your field and the annotations are in paragraph form. Note also that the entries are alphabetized by the first word in the bibliographic entry. If you are writing an annotated bibliography with many sources, it may be helpful to divide the sources into categories. For example, if putting together an extensive annotated bibliography for stem cell research, it might be best to divide the sources into categories such as ethical concerns, scholarly analyses, and political ramifications. For more examples, a quick search at a library or even on the Internet should produce several examples of annotated bibliographies in your area.

An annotated bibliography is an organized list of sources may be any variety of materials, books, documents, videos, articles, web sites, CD-ROMs, etc. What Is the Purpose of an Annotated Bibliography? An annotated bibliography may serve a number of purposes, including but not limited to: A review of the literature on a particular subject Illustrate the quality of research that you have done Provide examples of the types of sources available Describe other items on a topic that may be of interest to the reader Explore the subject for further research The annotated bibliography may be selective or comprehensive in its coverage. A selective annotated bibliography includes just those items that are best for the topic while an exhaustive annotated bibliography attempts to identify all that is available on a subject. Organization of an Annotated Bibliography The organization of the annotated bibliography, if not prescribed by faculty instructions, may be one of various methods, including but not limited to: By language Annotations vs. Abstracts Annotations in an annotated bibliography usually perform two functions, describe the source and evaluate the source. The annotation is a concise description of a particular source, including important aspects of content not evident in the title. It enables the researcher to establish the relevance of a specific journal article, book, research report, or government document, etc. Abstracts, such as those found in various periodical databases or those accompanying scholarly journal articles are usually just descriptive summaries. Elements of an Annotation Information found in an annotation may include: Johnson Two will not, New York, Riposte Press, who not only has developed the rational themes of the eighteenth century but is convinced the romantic elements at best are only a skein through the major prose and poetry"; 6. Structure of an Annotation Length: Generally, annotations constitute one paragraph and are approximately words long, with a goal of concise and explicative annotations Person: The third person is the standard, though first person may be appropriate for certain types of annotated bibliographies. Use the vocabulary of the author, as much as possible, to convey the ideas and conclusions of the author. If you use a quotation excerpted from the work set it within quotation marks. Vary your sentence structure and try to avoid repetitive vacuous phrases in your annotations, such as, "The author states," "This article concerns," or "The purpose of this report is," as well as sentences starting with "It was suggested that," "It was found that," and "It was reported that. Whole sentences are preferable, but single descriptive words, and simple phrases or lists may be acceptable. Annotations should be one paragraph long. For more information ask a reference librarian. Examples of an Annotated Bibliography Entry Example 1: In this publication Broude has taken full advantage of her feminist lens to scrutinize modern French science. Citations and Format and Style Citations You need to cite the material or the paper you have chosen. Mention a brief annotation that gives an aphoristic theory of the fundamental theme and hint of the book or article. Include one or more sentences that either: The intended audience gets given quoted comments; The background of the author of the book gets evaluated; Make a comparison and contrast between this work and another work you have cited; Throw a light to your bibliography by elucidating how this works. You should always think through of the format you are to use unless your instructor requests a unique arrangement. An annotated bibliography example using APA bibliography format: This article examines the usage of Ritalin in Canada. It specifically covers the side effects of drugs and the debate surrounding its use, and how the teachers have relayed on it to control problem students. The basis of this article is the information that gets conducted on statistics, interviews, and studies done. It is a well-researched and written article. The article examines the consumption of Ritalin in Canada. An annotated bibliography structure begins with the author stating the full article while using the correct citation style. Later the writer provides the reasons why it was selected, gives a brief description of the works and the observed contributions that it makes towards the research. List the main arguments or the core themes: The reader should get a quick understanding what the work is all about. List the topics covered: The reader of the annotations should know if the source is mainly academic or not. Also, let the reader know whether the source is responsive to the layperson. Take a close look at the source and ponder if the information is genuine, independent or influenced by opinion or fact and if the source is current or outdated. Arrangement and Planning Citations should get arranged according to a specific order. The readers can integrate them when you plan and organize citations efficiently. If your instructor does not request particular arrangement, your citations could be of the following ways:
