My anticipation of opening gifts on Christmas Day was boundless, for I knew my mother was an uncontrolled shopper when it came to my whims. After opening one gift after another, I toted my new acquisitions up and down the street so all the neighbors would know that Santa loved me best and that my parents were spoiling me to my complete satisfaction. From such a worldly background of material prosperity, it seemed only natural for me to fantasize that when I had children of my own the established tradition of wealth and abundant giving at Christmas would continue. If that had been the case, I would not have had one memorable Christmas—just more of the same. It was in , almost twenty years ago, that my Christmas took a strange twist. I was no longer the little girl awaiting the parental handout, but was an adult attempting to make my own way in life. I was a graduate student in , completing a doctoral degree and raising three small sons alone. Like several other graduate students, I had obtained university employment as a research writer for a professor; and like most of the students, I was struggling to meet my financial obligations. Five days before Christmas, I realized that my mismanagement of funds would prevent much gift buying of any kind. It seemed unbearable to me. Cuddling my sons, I reluctantly explained my abhorrence of debt and the specter of our economic plight. Santa Claus will give us gifts. My sons had been good. They had found happiness and friendship in our family; we all were unusually close. Perhaps it was our circumstance. Yet, despite their goodness, they would soon be disappointed because neither Santa nor mother would bring the desired presents on Christmas Day. That night I cried and pled with the Lord for relief, for a glimmer of hope that Christmas in our home would be better than I anticipated. My verbal prayers awakened the children. They seemed to intuitively know what was causing my unhappiness. The next morning I could not hide the despair and self-pity that had marred my face through the night. A curious, unstamped envelope caught my attention. I gazed at the envelope and wondered if it were meant for me. Hoping it was, I tore it open. To my surprise I found several dollars inside, but not a note of explanation. Together we counted the money, examined the envelope, and expressed wonder at the anonymous gift. This was a direct answer to my prayer. There was enough money in the envelope to buy an extra gift for each child. I was stunned and amazed, and my joy and excitement of Christmas had returned. It was going to be a great Christmas Day after all. Where had the money come from? Could it be from a neighbor, a friend, a classmate, or the bishop? Logical deduction led me first to near neighbors. It must be the bishop, I decided. He denied being our benefactor, however, and assured us that he did not know who had been so kind. Curiosity mounted as nightfall approached. I read the envelope again: I also observed that each dollar bill had been folded and unfolded many times, as if each one had been of infinite worth. My desire to uncover the identity of the anonymous donor grew. Soon that desire was coupled with the gnawing resolve to return the money. The misshapen letters and folded bills evidenced that the generous donor also had financial difficulties. I knew who had a broken typewriter, and who needed to replace their ribbon, and who carefully folded and unfolded money, checking each dollar bill. It was my three sons. With tears of love, I awoke the donors. You gave me the money. You gave me all the money you possess! They sat silent for several moments until my nine-year-old Brian turned to his younger brother Todd and punched him. I had seen generosity in all those around me, but had failed to recognize the generous hearts of my children. Christmas was indeed a merry Christmas worth remembering.

The Anonymous Benefactor trope as used in popular culture. Oh, woe is The Pollyanna! Her humble aspirations are practically a Tragic Dream because she's poor.

A friend of his stepson, I just happen to be sitting in the kitchen of his Ravenswood home one Saturday morning. We spent a year designing it, a year raising capital He helps start innovative businesses, nonprofits, and think tanks. Then he leaves to do something else. After leaving her job as director of the Wieboldt Foundation, she became a major catalyst for changes in the Chicago Public Schools. Most days Anne gets up early and goes to work. Stan gets up and putters around the house. Anne always seems to be doing two things at once. Stan, at 67, is a big, gentle guy with drooping features and a paunch--he has the air of not doing much. Stan Hallett says he was a country boy. His father was a Methodist minister, and the family moved from town to town in Iowa and South Dakota, eventually settling in Rapid City. At age 14, Stan began preaching to a congregation in Wall, South Dakota, when the famous Wall Drug was still "just a tiny drugstore. He started graduate school in sociology at Duke when he was He had a knack for meeting historically significant people before they became famous. His name was George McGovern. South Dakota was solidly Republican at the time. It was traditionally conservative, whereas Nebraska and North Dakota were traditionally liberal. He became secretary of the Democratic Party. He ran a real grassroots campaign for Congress against Joe Foss, who had been governor and was a war hero--and he won. He was obviously a very good student. Someone ought to look at the role of Boston University in organizing the civil rights movement. A lot of people went there, many black leaders who had a strategic sense of social change--King, Jim Lawson, the head of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. These people had courses on theories of social change; they studied struggles for social justice from the biblical record and from Western civilization. Dean Walter Muelder was our major professor. He was a wonderful student of the history of moral ideas and the social teachings of the church. He was a significant mover in starting the World Council of Churches in He was way before his time on the status of women in the church, and he had a very strong commitment to dealing with questions of race. Jim was one of these four-star guys: And committed to racial justice. He had a big impact on me. Both of us were interested in Gandhi. While I was in college, he was organizing protests in Nashville. He had gone to prison refusing the draft. He went to India to study Gandhi. Later on, there was a big conflict in the [Southern Christian Leadership Conference] because a lot of people wanted him to be head of the SCLC under King, while some thought he was too radical. Jim was in Memphis, helping to organize the sanitation workers. Remember, King had come to Memphis to help organize the sanitation workers when he was assassinated. When I got to Boston, I was living in a slum, on the edge of Roxbury. And the contrast between life in the slums and in the suburbs was intriguing to me. I did a photo study. What got me interested in urban planning was living in a city through the eyes of someone who came from South Dakota. During the late s I spent four years in Newark as a minister, building an interracial community organization and an interracial church in a white neighborhood that was changing. You develop a special relationship with people as a pastor. You get to know people at a very different level than the sort of normal social contact. And you get angry at the racism they experience. I discovered that my perceptions of race were like an onion. Like most professionals, they were fitting into the existing power arrangements without being critical of them. So I spent an afternoon with him. Zay just want to know how to make a vindow tight. Then Mies stood up to accept the award and he gave an eloquent affirmation of what I had said. He also taught at the University of Chicago and at an ecumenical school on the near west side called the Urban Training Center for Christian Mission, which taught organizing strategies to civil rights activists before they headed south. We would do a very simplified work flowchart. The civil rights movement was sweeping the country, energizing and shaping a generation of young people and testing most of the major institutions. The Urban Training Center was pretty much in the middle of that, trying to keep communication open between various groups. A lot was going on at this time. Although prosperous suburbs continued to expand, large numbers of people became aware of the poverty of many urban neighborhoods and rural towns. He was one of the most hated men in Mississippi because he was seen as a white turncoat. He was the one who dropped Medgar Evers off the night Evers was killed in front of his home. Northern media were relying on Mississippi outlets to cover the news. We have to get outside credible sources in here to get the news out. I gave probably the best speech of my life. And then we began to organize a delegation of clergy to go there from northern cities with the purpose of keeping down the violence. The clergy would come back to Detroit or Baltimore, and then there would be an article in the local papers from somebody they trusted. One after another the major metropolitan dailies started to report what was going on. When we were working on desegregating churches in Mississippi, I would talk to Nick every night. Nick would suggest what to do next because he knew what would make the news. He was a good reporter and detective writer. Edgar Chandler, a Congregational minister, was its executive director. His capacity to cut through bureaucracy and red tape was unparalleled. He was always finding the shortest distance between two points. One of the first things Ed did upon arriving here was lead a march into Rainbow Beach, which was still a segregated beach, along with Monsignor John Egan and Rabbi Robert Marx; that must have been around He stood up against the business community and Daley, or at least he stood independent of them. He did it in a way that was diplomatic but firm. Our era now has very few sources of moral authority. Back in the summer of , the National Council of Churches hired Hallett to work with developer Jim Rouse to come up with one possible solution. I was doing analysis on what it would look like if you had congregations of different churches share the same religious facility near the center of town, with a day care center and meeting rooms. We designed it so that there could be a Jewish service on Sabbath, then the Protestants come in on Sunday--roll out the ark, roll in the altar. Different situations call for different strategies, but, Hallett says, once action is taken there are always side benefits. He approached Hallett to learn how to get started. But they still had to fight the building codes because Daley had such strict regulations on what could become a theater that it was almost impossible. Jim organized such a strong combination of church and community support that the building code was changed. Churches that were out got fire inspections. In order to deal with police infringements on civil liberties, we formed an organization that monitored police activity. We had what we called a Bible study group where a group of us would gather. Alinsky organized a bitter fight in Rochester against Eastman-Kodak. It divided the community. A Baptist minister hung himself in a church basement. Another left the church. My sense is that you tend to be OK in the heat of struggle. Then his wife of nearly 25 years, Sarah, filed for divorce. I had married young, at 18, when I was a senior in college. She was a girl from Mitchell, South Dakota, a fine woman. I had a lot of responsibility for the kids. We had four kids, all of whom turned out really well. But when they were little, I was working all day at the Church Federation and teaching at the Urban Training Center at night, and that was a high price to pay being away from my kids. It probably contributed some to the divorce. Also, I used to think it was important to achieve a position of power and prestige and status. I felt enormously relieved to know I had limits. I was just glad to be alive.

An anonymous benefactor paid her overdue taxes, saving her home from foreclosure. "I was in a state of shock," Tompkins said of the moment she heard the news.

Close friends tried to dissuade Barnardo on the grounds that this was a pointless and well-nigh crazy idea. At that time he attended a conference in Oxford, and settled into a small hotel in the town. He had barely begun to unpack his cases when a knock came at his door. Barnardo opened the door to see a total stranger staring him in the face. The stranger said, "Dr Barnardo" "Yes", Barnardo replied. The stranger said, "You are thinking of building a village for orphan girls at Ilford, are you not" "Yes", the Doctor admitted. The rest is history! For seven long years famine had plagued the land 8: This little community at Gilgal had been delivered from the danger of unwholesome stew but their troubles were not yet over. Although this famine was drawing to a close food was still scarce and prospects for the immediate future were far from encouraging. Now in any climate of economic deprivation and shortages, the natural reaction is predictable As the late Francis Schaeffer expressed it, "the priorities of a materialistic culture are personal peace and affluence", that is get all you can, can all you get and to pot with the rest". But God took what he gave and made it a blessing to many! God moved this man to bring a gift to Elisha. Look at the gift that he brought. You see there was something: What did he bring "Twenty loaves of barley bread from the first ripe corn, along with some heads of new corn". Concerning the firstfruits we read, "The first of the firstfruits of thy land thou shalt bring into the house of the Lord thy God". Baal worship, idolatry was established in the land 3: The important thing is this, in the midst of his changed circumstances he did not forget his responsibility to God! Here was a man who sought to give in accordance with the Scriptures! Do you and I do this Ills: Ron Blue a Christian financial counselor has calculated that "if all Christians were reduced to a welfare cheque from Social Security and they tithed on that amount, the church would overall double its receipts". Well, how much are we to give Paul says, "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him. Is this not what the widow gave " All that she had". You see if we are right in suggesting that this was the first harvest since the time of drought and famine 4: For did you notice where he came from Baal-shalisha Some scholars reckon this was a village near Mount Ephraim, some distance from Gilgal. This village was originally called "Shalisha", but the evil power exerted by Jezebel had stamped upon it the name of her false god 1 Chron 5: What an indictment against our casual Christianity that wants to give God our leftovers: My, around us the world devotes its treasures to its gods After all, times were hard! My, resources were scarce for Elisha yet here is offering to feed the students from the Bible College! Do you know why God has prospered you Well, Paul says "And God is able to make all grace abound to you so that in all things at all times, having all that you need, you will abound in every good work". A man who lives for others: A man who trusts God for the supernatural: My, there were a men and only 20 loaves and some corn but Elisha believed that God could miraculously meet the need. A man who anticipates the superabundant: My, this is the confidence of a man who believes that God is always liberal in His giving Jam 1: Faith mighty faith, the promise sees And looks to God alone; Laughs at impossibilities, and cries, It shall be done".
