

1: AP US Government Chapter 1 Study Guide - AP US Government - Stuvia

What is Study Notes? That's easy â€” it's the best way to study for AP classes and AP exams! StudyNotes offers fast, free study tools for AP www.enganchecubano.com AP study guides, practice tests, and notes are the best on the web because they're contributed by students and teachers like yourself.

Think about the things you will be tested on when exam time comes. Try to make these as detailed as possible, and either use your book or check your work with your book or another source at the end, as you will be referencing these throughout the study guide. Read one for each country, and then summarize three of the articles you chose with concise paragraphs. Writing down summaries will help you remember current events and keep them in your head, and improving your writing skills can exponentially improve your chances of doing well on the exam. Does the person you shared with now understand what is happening in the event and its ramifications for the nation? Day 2 â€” Begin today by writing summaries for the three remaining current events articles you read yesterday. If you do not have full access to Albert. Although it is possible to complete this review course without full access to Albert. If getting full access to Albert. Also, thoroughly read and take notes on the explanations that Albert. Although seeing a high number of wrong answers might be disheartening, keep in mind that this is the very beginning of your journey to success on the exam, and that half of the questions were from the highest of the three difficulty levels. Although typing is okay, it is best to hand write these notes, as the act of writing itself will help you remember. Day 3 â€” Use your book and your class notes to begin making flashcards for this class. The AP Government and Politics Exams are both very vocabulary-focused, as political science has a particular vocabulary that needs to be grasped to get to the deeper levels of interpretation and analysis of political data. As such, these flashcards and your notes on unfamiliar terms and concepts will be vital to your success on this exam. Try to get through at least half of the terms and concepts in the Introduction section and the Sovereignty, Authority, and Power section. To help, you may want to re-read or skim the detailed descriptions of each section that you read on Day One in the Course Description. Add in any terms you came across in your book or another resource that are unfamiliar to or difficult for you. As said at the beginning, this study guide is adaptable, and focusing the most on the terms you personally need to cover is vital to your success. Take notes on where the focus of this section will be. Go over your notes on unfamiliar terms and concepts, highlighting any terms that still seem especially difficult for you. Reading through these notes and highlighting are very important. As before, try to do one easy or moderate question and one difficult from each subset. Day 5 Tomorrow will be a mock AP Exam day, so today will be focused on review. You can break this up to make it easier, and do it in any way you please â€” self-quizzing, quizzing or games with your study group, asking a friend to help, writing yourself short tests or assigning yourself writing prompts â€” anything at all. Try a few different review methods and see what works best for you. Also read your notes on the Course Description sections you read this week. Nerves and weariness can do almost as much damage to a student taking an exam as being unprepared can under the right circumstances. Day 6 Today is your first mock AP Exam! With this and all the following AP-like exercises in the study guide including two more mock AP Exams and several FRQs , it is important to work under test-like conditions. Keep the other two-thirds separate so you may go over them on subsequent days. Remember to mark any cards or highlight any terms that are giving you extra difficulty. Try to get through at least a third of your new flashcards today. Then give a brief summary of the social and cultural lives and civil rights situations of each of the six countries. Think about points of contrast between countries â€” say, all the differences between levels of personal and political freedom in Great Britain, Mexico, and China. What causes this differences and what effects do different levels of freedom have on other aspects of politics and government in those countries? Write a two- or three- paragraph essay comparing and contrasting at least one of the core countries with at least one other. Did you remember most of your terms, or at least more than you did before starting this study program? Honest self-assessment is one of the most difficult things about being a student and preparing for tests, but is vital not only for AP Exams but for the college and working worlds as well. Follow your usual procedures for marking difficult terms and concepts for inclusion in your notes, and expand your list of key terms for this subject area if necessary. Day 4 – Finish making notes for your difficult terms and concepts. As you re-read them, annotate them with anything new you have learned or anything you would like to add. As said last week, feel free to mix up your review methods – some notes reading, some self-quizzing, some quizzing or study games with classmates, some self-assessed writing exercises. By now you should be getting a good idea of what helps you most. Think about comparing and contrasting the situations in various countries, as that is what a good many FRQs focus on. Are you retaining that information well? Day 6 Today is your second mock AP Exam. As stated a week ago, it is best to complete these assignments under conditions that are as much like the test as possible – no breaks in the middle of tasks, no outside resources, short breaks between tasks, keeping time in mind on FRQs, etc. Did your score improve since the last mock exam? If not, think about the reasons why it did not – was the new material more difficult? Were you particularly tired today, or was some study activity not working? Try to figure out what went wrong this time around, while you have plenty of time to correct it before test day. Think about how the key points for this section encompass much of what we have already covered. Are you still retaining knowledge? Track your right and wrong answers and write down any difficult terms and concepts for further research as usual. You should get through at least a quarter of your flashcards. Day 3 – Look over a different set of ten to twenty random flashcards from previous sections, quizzing yourself and marking anything you need to study or research further. Write similarly focused essays on Nigeria and Great Britain. Try to finish them, or get fairly close, by the end of this session. Day 4 – Finish any flashcards and notes on difficult terms if necessary. If you need to add to these or annotate them, do it now, as these are a very useful component of your study guide. Having a good understanding of current events and trends is a vital component of being a good student and a good citizen. Day 5 – Look over a set of about twenty random flashcards from all previous sections. Take notes on what the major foci for this section are. Try to get half of each done today. Day 6 Rather than using today as a mock AP Test, it will be a large cumulative review. However, it will include a full FRQ packet, and this should be completed under test-like conditions which means getting it done to the best of your ability in minutes. Think about current trends in each of the six countries, and of the overarching trends that connect them all: As we have gone over all the subject areas covered in this course, you should have a bit of a grasp on all materials. Still, when you are finished, go over it extensively as you have gone over FRQs in previous weeks. If not, find ways to calm yourself, and really think about your study habits, remembering that honest, high-quality self-assessment is one of your most important keys to success. Also talk about the history of globalization and the role of technology in increasing its pace. Try to focus on articles that have global implications. Find a friend or family member who is not as well-versed in politics, preferably not another AP Comparative student, and try to explain the concept to her or him. Then find a classmate or your teacher and explain the same concept to him or her. Do you have difficulty finding the words or does it come easily? Read the explanations thoroughly, whether you are right or wrong on a given question. Would you feel comfortable explaining this material to a friend? Day 4 – Research current events in Nigeria and Russia, summarizing one or two articles about each country as before. Try explaining the current state of political affairs in each country to a classmate or family member. Write a list of the ways globalization has affected each of the six core countries recently – be specific! Are there any areas you feel you need extra review? Circle, highlight, or star any areas you are somewhat unsure about in yellow. Day 6 – Today we will begin with a massive multiple choice review. Complete all the Albert. Instead, break them into small groups of about five related questions, do them all at once, and then spend some time reading their associated explanations and perhaps expanding your notes. After completing all of the questions, go over your answers extensively with the Scoring Guidelines and Sample Responses. If you have extra time before the test, continue reviewing flashcards, written assignments, and notes on difficult terms and concepts, but, even more importantly, keep your eating and sleeping patterns regular and healthy. Engage in calming pre-test rituals, and be sure to eat a healthy breakfast. This test is difficult, but you have already worked very hard to prepare yourself, and are ready to do your absolute best. Let us know what has worked for you. Do you have recommendations of your own on how to study for the AP Comparative Government exam?

AP US Government Study Strategies Here are a few helpful tips to keep in mind as you look through these AP Government notes. Tailoring your study strategies to the structure of the curriculum and the format of test questions is the first step towards earning a high AP score!

Although you have probably already worked through AP-style multiple choice questions in class, the exercises across these two days will focus upon getting you a variety of questions in terms of content and difficulty level to give you a feel for the test so that you may better prepare for it. Notice that they are divided into six sections, which line up with the sections outlined in the Course Description. Today we will be working with the first 3 sections: Mark or write down the name and number of each question you do and whether you got it right or wrong. Do not look at any of the other questions yet. If you do not have full access to Albert. Although it is possible to complete this review course without full access to Albert. If getting full access to Albert. Write down the amount of correct and incorrect or guessed answers and figure out your percentage of correct answers out of the total number of questions. This can be challenging at first, and your confidence may suffer a blow, but remember that this is only the first day of your study program and that you have plenty of time to improve. However, you can always improve and it is important to stay vigilant and dedicated even when you feel at your best. Look over the list and highlight any terms or concepts that factored into a question you missed, or any you do not recognize or are still confused about. Day 2 – Repeat the multiple choice practice procedure outlined on the previous day for the fourth section of Albert. Take a few notes on the explanations given for any question that you got wrong or that you had difficulty with, and be sure to write down the question name and number so you can come back and re-read the explanation later. When you are confused about other similar terms later on, try looking them up and then writing a paragraph or designing a chart comparing and contrasting them. Write down your correct and incorrect answers and percentage of correct answers again. Day 3 – Look over your list of key terms with difficult terms highlighted. Define the first terms, identifying each with a brief definition from a textbook or dictionary and sentences on its significance to the subject. Use your textbook and any other reliable written or online resources. Try to break down the wordier, fuller definitions in your notes to concise bullet points for each term. Note – although it is more convenient to make flashcards online and to type notes up, you should try to do one of these two activities by hand, as the act of writing things down will help you remember them. Because the flashcards will be gone over more extensively than the notes and are less thoroughly engaging than making the notes, I recommend handwriting the notes and making the flashcards online, but this can be changed to suit your taste. Day 4 – Look over the notes you made yesterday, focusing on the extensive notes on difficult terms. Highlight any sections in the notes you need to do more work on or pay special attention to later. Although there are similar diagrams online and probably in your textbook, try to draw this and fill it in from memory. Then check it against an outside resource, congratulating yourself on everything you got right and adding anything you forgot. Take notes as you read. Do you feel you understand everything you need to? Tomorrow will be a mock AP exam focused on this section – are you ready? Try to get at least halfway through your flashcards for the first section. Do the 4th FRQ from the year Try to complete it in 25 minutes, as this is roughly the amount of time you should spend on each FRQ during the exam, since you are allotted minutes to complete 4 questions. Just do your best! Day 1 – Review your flashcards from the first week, marking any that give you trouble for further study. Take a few notes or highlight the sections you want to remember. Keep in mind that the same people who write and grade the exam write these descriptions of each section and what a student should know about each topic, so this is a very valuable study tool. Try to get through at least half of the terms for this section. Day 2 – Look back through the notes you completed yesterday, highlighting any difficult or highly important sections – perhaps in different colors. This will bring your total for today to 20 questions. This may not seem like very many, but remember to keep your note-taking on the explanations extensive and to add any more terms or concepts you want notes and flashcards on to your list. Day 3 – Finish your Section II flashcards. Take notes or highlight as you go along. Try to get through at least half of the key terms for Section III before the end of your session today. Day 5 – Go back through the notes you made over the past two days extensively. Also spend a little time with your older notes, from Sections I and II, especially on topics that confused you yesterday. Are you starting to remember information well? Add any new key or difficult terms to your list for Section III. Try to get the terms for Section III done today. If you choose to split your sixth session across two days, that will be very easy here; if you do not, do take a short break between the review session and the testing session to stay relaxed and so you are not taking the test having just had review material directly in front of you. Look over your flashcards for Sections I and II. Having reviewed information on political behaviors and political parties this week, think about what you would have done differently. Congratulate yourself on anything you got right before the review and keep anything you got wrong or left out in mind. Then write down the names of interest groups along with their ideological alignment liberal, conservative, moderate, far right, far left, libertarian, etc. Check this information against anything you have on political parties and interest groups in your notes and textbook. Self-Assessment Period – Go to Albert. Focus on reading through the explanations for each multiple choice question on Albert. As with last week, it may be beneficial to enlist the help of a friend or family member to help you look over your FRQs. Keep in mind that you will need to be able to meet all the requirements laid out in this section to perform well on questions relating to this topic on the AP Exam. Summarize one feature or article on a topic covered in Section I, II, or III and another feature or article concerning one or more of the four institutions the Presidential administration, Congress, the federal courts system, and the federal bureaucracy that this section of the course is concerned with. This summary can consist of A writing a paragraph or two or B explaining the events and how they relate to AP US Government and Politics to a classmate, teacher, friend, or family member. If not, think about any difficulties that may have come up really tired one day, one topic being harder for you than the others and any ways you can improve your study patterns, such as going over your notes in new ways, as suggested back in Week Two. Also be sure you getting good amounts of nutritional food, sleep, and exercise to keep your mind and body healthy for this rigorous study program and the exam itself. Take notes or highlight as with other sections of the Course Description. Because this is a longer piece and divided into several sections written by different authors, feel free to take breaks and work on flashcards or notes. Think about the role the Fourteenth Amendment plays in the protection or lack thereof of certain civil rights and liberties for certain groups of people. Also think about any current events related to civil rights and liberties you may have seen recently, and, if it helps, talk about them with a friend or write about them a bit. Is there anything you would like to add? Is the writing clear? Think about the ways in which the articles you read yesterday and any current events dealing with civil rights and liberties relate to these questions. Then check yourself against your notes or book. When you review notes and flashcards, be sure to look over landmark court cases, as they are often very difficult to memorize and always come up at least a few times on the AP Exam. If you have extra time on any day during the rest of this study guide or at the end, and you are a student who has particular difficulty with memorizing court cases, try completing this exercise a few more times throughout the rest of the time before the exam, with different court cases. Are you retaining information well? Review any sections or concepts that give you particular difficulty extensively. Day 6 – Go to Albert. Remember to do these questions in test-like conditions, not reading the explanations yet or allowing yourself outside help. Again, mimic test-like conditions. Look over the explanations for all the questions, specifically focusing on those you got wrong. Remember it may be ideal to enlist the help of a friend in self-assessing written work. Really try to figure out what the pros and cons of your current study methods are, and modify them if necessary. With the study guide nearly completed, you should be improving your understanding of all the subject areas we have covered or better understanding how to move forward in the very near future with improving them. Take a moment and think back on your recent successes and on your plans to improve yourself even further, and allow yourself to build up confidence. Day 1 – To warm up, start with 20 Albert. Think about how public policy and its subsequent interpretation and application are the final result of everything else you have studied this year. Also think about how the interpretation and application of policy can become policy in and of itself. Try to get through a third of them. Day 2 – Begin by reviewing random flashcards from all other sections. Review the notes you have already made. Think about how these decisions came about, what groups may have played a part, and how interpretation and enforcement will or already have affected them. Day 3 – Begin by reviewing more random flashcards from all other sections – try not to do too many of the same ones you did yesterday, unless you are purposefully reviewing those that gave you difficulty. If available, try to do one question of each difficulty level in each subset. Complete the entire FRQ packet in minutes under test-like conditions, then self-assess using the attached guides. Are they clear and concise? Do they communicate your ideas effectively? Are your ideas correct and fully elaborated upon? Treat it as much like the real test as possible, and start tonight by going over the behaviors you will use the night before the test bed at a good time, some relaxing and enjoyable activity to relax with, etc. This section is supposed to serve not only as a review, but as a confidence-builder, because you will have already worked under test-like conditions multiple times before taking the real exam. You may, however, leave the assessment of your results until the next day. Take each subsequent question from a subsection other than the one the question that preceded it was in, until this is no longer possible.
