Vital Text: "Applied Photography, Student Text People who read have more information, but not because they have more access to information, because with each person's internet appearing, on a larger or smaller level, people are reading more information because they know how to filter it more good., Because they distinguish more easily what is important from what it is, that is determining.

Photo projects offer a great way to try something new and can help you get out of a rut. This is where photo essays can come in. If you are looking for someone to prepare a custom written paper for you, contact AdvancedWriters. A photographic essay is a set or series of photographs that are intended to tell a story or evoke a series of emotions in the viewer. It allows the photographer to tell more than what is possible with a single image. Essays can range from purely photographic no text to photographs with captions, small texts or full text essays accompanying them. Photo essays are typically either thematic addressing a specific topic or issue or narrative tells a story, usually in chronological sequence. Following are ten photo essays ideas to consider

Photo Essay 1: Document a Local Event. The town I live in has an annual bicycle classic. To turn this into a photo essay, one could arrive early to catch the cyclists and sponsors as they are preparing, then photograph the cyclists riding throughout the day, and finish with some shots of tents coming down and everyone heading home. Find an exhibition going on at a nearby gallery or museum. Not only photograph the pieces themselves but also those in attendance how they are interacting with the pieces and among themselves. If you can, attend the reception so you can also capture the artist or artists whose work is on display or the curators of the exhibit. For this photo essay, find a subject that is undergoing a short-term transformation. This could include a group of men growing mustaches to celebrate Movember or a stray dog brought in to a shelter that is groomed and adopted. This sort of essay should take no longer than a month or so to tell its story. Think pregnancy, from the baby bump through to birth and maybe even the first birthday, or following a returning soldier and their transformation back to civilian life. This project should last months and could be worked around other projects being completed at the same time. A Day in the Life. For this essay, find someone such as a doctor, lawyer, firefighter, or police officer willing to let you follow him or her for a day, both behind the scenes and during their job. If there are times when photos cannot be taken, then you can use the text option for a photo essay and supplement your photos with some captions or short written passages. Find a local charity and document their daily operations, their personnel, and who or what they are helping. Give a visual sense of what they are trying to accomplish and why it is important. Turn a Day Out into Reportage. Find a location one would normally go to for a day out but treat this day out more as reportage photograph behind the scenes shots, interview workers and customers. Locations could include amusement parks, nature preserves, or movie theaters. Give Meaning to Street Photography. Hit the streets and document the faces of the homeless or the lives of streetwalkers. Try to go deeper than the surface and look for what passersby tend to ignore. Find a neighborhood and, after photographing the homes, ask to photograph those inside the homes. You could photograph them inside their homes or just in their doorways, depending upon what you want the focus to be on the interiors or the individuals within those interiors. Find a school and photograph its students, teachers, and classrooms. Show the students studying and playing and the teachers teaching and on break. Photograph the computer labs and technology if it is a more affluent school or focus on what the teachers make do with if it is a less affluent school. For a longer essay, you could compare and contrast a rural school to a city school. About the Author Facebook Jeremiah Gilbert is a college professor, photographer, and avid traveler.
