Horse Chestnut Careful management of funds is an essential part of church flower arranging and there are many tricks to make a little go a long way, with stunning results. Creating something special with only a small allowance is challenging, creative and rewarding. Growing your own Unless you have a large, well-managed garden, I would limit growing flowers for cutting to an essential few. Where money is tight, buy flowers locally when they are in season. What is more important, whatever your size of garden, is the cultivation of shrubs and other plants for foliage; these are invaluable all year round. Many shrubs also have lovely flowers and berries that can be used in arrangements. Shrubs are, of course, not instant and they should be planned with a long-term view. The church garden can also be used as a cutting garden but, again, focus on foliage rather than flowers. Bulrushes Wild Plan Material Use the flowers that grow in abundance, whether from the roadside verge or the garden. Condition well, keep the water clean and your flowers will look good for longer. Simple flowers can often be best, even though the arrangements shown here contain many exotics bought from florists, a simple vase of cow parsley is always a winner. It is essential to remove excess foliage and to give the cut stems a long drink in a cool place before arranging. Bowls of conkers horse chestnuts this side of the pond , together with some of their shells, are lovely on the entrance table in the autumn. Round flowers always dominate a display; these work well with other white flowers. These make attractive accents that help to draw the eye into the center of pedestal displays. Excellent for outlines for pedestal arrangements. Pick when mature from midsummer onwards. Whether short or long, this foliage is useful for just about every design. Grows rampantly throughout Britain. The seeds turn from green in the summer to rich red-brown in the autumn. The seeds stay well on the stem and are useful in both seasons. Dock can also be preserved if picked while still green and provides a good vertical accent throughout the later part of autumn and winter. Stripped of its leaves, the branches of green keys last well and provide a wonderful outline for large arrangements in late spring. Their fragrance is an added attraction. Take care the seed heads are not too mature or they may explode once they are taken into a warm atmosphere. They can be kept stable by spraying with hairspray. This native shrub has black berries that give long-lasting color and do not drop easily. Position a bowlful of cones at the church entrance. Cones can be wired and used together with other plant material in autumn and Christmas arrangements. Display these on their own in spring and use in pedestals at Easter. Alternatively, add a few branches to a bowl of flowering bulbs. It will give the impression of the flowers growing under a tree. Magnificent in summer and autumn arrangements of all sizes. Strip their thorns before using. Flowers in season Flowers in season are less expensive in the shops and at the flower markets. Think of daffodils and tulips in spring, phlox, peonies and sunflowers in summer, hydrangeas, dahlias and solidago golden rod in late summer and autumn and anemones, fragrant narcissi, hellebores and amaryllis in winter and early spring. Use with variegated foliage such as ivy, available all year round, to create impact at little expense. Sourcing local flowers Local flowers will be cheaper than imports. In Britain, calla lilies and narcissus are wonderful in the spring. Antirrhinum, lavender, peonies, phlox, stocks and sweet peas can be found during summer. In the autumn, dahlias, hydrangea, Chinese lanterns Physalis alkekengi var. Try your local allotment society to see if any plot holders would be willing to grow, sell or contribute flowers. Note â€” many of these are also readily available in parts of the USA. I have, however, found that when I knock at the door and ask permission to cut for the church I have usually been granted permission cheerfully. Preparation If treated correctly, flowers and foliage will last much longer. Arrange flowers in the medium that suits them best, so, for example, place spring flowers in shallow water deep water will rot the soft stems , with or without a chicken-wire support. Astringent Water the flowers at least once a day if the weather is hot if not twice and leave a reservoir in the bottom of the container. Treat the finished display to a fine spray of cool water. Position the flowers out of direct sun. If the display is in a draft, use only robust flowers and foliage. Rapid transpiration caused by cold draughts causes moisture loss and shortens the life of the flower.

Start Slideshow 1 of 10 Lesson 1 Celebrate big, billowing flowers with an exuberant large-scale arrangement. This display showcases the unrestrained beauty of hydrangeas. An armful of the flowers overflows a generous glazed-iron urn-shaped vase in an effortlessly elegant way. Tendrils of clematis winding through the blooms emphasize the cottage-garden feeling. An assemblage of begonia leaves snipped from houseplants invites a closer look and rewards the viewer with varied colors, patterns, and textures. The rich shades of red and green blend beautifully with the caramel-colored Mission vase. Flower stems naturally follow the shape of this vase: They reach up and out, and the result is delicate and light. Choose flowers with graceful stems, such as this crocosmia, for the most pleasing look. Shorter cuttings of maidenhair fern float beneath the blooms. Echo the idea with smaller vessels -- parfait glasses work perfectly -- holding just a few stems. A yellowware kitchen bowl of late-summer dahlias would certainly be lovely enough on its own, but adding a contrasting element -- here, wispy asparagus fronds -- make the hot colors and spiky forms even more striking. Swipe here for next slide 6 of 10 Tip A grid of clear cellophane tape spanning the wide mouth of the bowl supports the top-heavy flowers better than a frog would. Cut the stems short, and insert one or two flowers in each opening in the grid. Tuck fern clippings in last. Hydrangeas and clematis in purple tones look unified yet diverse. The aqua-colored McCoy bowl peeking out is a bright surprise. Dainty alstroemeria make much more of an impression when grouped by the dozen. A neat dome of them -- with every leaf removed -- is softened by a cuff of chartreuse hosta leaves. Swipe here for next slide Share the gallery.
