Penn State University Libraries sponsors the juried annual award and its administrator, the Pennsylvania Center for the Book. Its layout defies most comics norms to create a unique visual experience: Between and , Ward published his six groundbreaking wordless novels: The jury also awarded two honor books: Graphic Novels as a Research Medium. Penn State University Libraries sponsors the juried award and its administrator, the Pennsylvania Center for the Book. The images welcome the reader into the complex, many-layered world of the Middle East, and Glidden is a terrific guide. She studies comic books from a feminist media studies approach, which involves examining how gender, race and sexuality intersect with comic book fandom and comic books as texts; Jessica Sensenig, Penn State sophomore student majoring in English and telecommunications, Chambersburg, Pa. She has a strong appreciation for the interplay of words and images used in graphic novels; Emily Steinberg, painter and graphic novelist, Philadelphia. He also has published and presented on the use of comics in the classroom. For more information about the selection criteria and how to submit books for consideration for the Lynd Ward Graphic Novel Prize, contact Ellysa Cahoy at ellysa.psu. These perspectives are inspired by a broad range of ideas from astronomy, mathematics, optics, philosophy, ecology, art, literature, cultural studies and comics. The graphic styles and layouts in this work are engaging and impressive and succeed in making the headiest of ideas accessible. It takes graphic narrative into the realm of theory, and it puts theory into practice with this artful presentation of how imaginative thinking can enrich our understanding of the world. Her vibrant watercolor illustration humanizes the reality of caring for loved ones as they age with candor and grace. The following comprise the selection jury for the prize: The Tamakis astutely orchestrate the formal complexities of the graphic novel in the service of an evocative, immersive story. At first blush a coming of age story centered on two young girls, the book belongs equally to all its cast of characters, any of whom feel realized enough to have supported a narrative in their own right. Striking, relatable, and poignant, this graphic novel lingers with readers long after their eyes have left the pages. The jury also awarded one honor book: Through the subtle transposition of objects and individuals in a room, the book teaches us that space is defined over time. The selection jury for the prize included Chair, Brandon Hyde, an undergraduate student majoring in English with a longstanding interest in comics and graphic novels; Joel D. Abel, an assistant professor of Comparative Literature and Japanese. Characters seem like embodied archetypes or allegories of psychological states, expressing themselves through their interactions with the fluid and unpredictable world they inhabit. Yang uses each text to refract the other, showing the contradictions and failures of both sides as well as their resonances. The selection jury for the prize included Chair J. Harlan Ritchey, freelance illustrator, designer, videographer and library assistant, Engineering Library, University Libraries; B. Huang, University graduate fellow and Ph. In so doing, he produces not a document but a monument, a work whose narrative logic is architectural rather than chronological: The selection jury for the prize included Chair Adam Haley, Ph. Sponsored by Penn State University Libraries and administered by the Pennsylvania Center for the Book, an affiliate of the Center for the Book at the Library of Congress, the Lynd Ward Graphic Novel Prize is presented annually to the best graphic novel, fiction or non-fiction, published in the previous calendar year by a living U. The jury also awarded four honor books prizes: For more information about the selection criteria and how to submit books for consideration for the Lynd Ward Graphic Novel Prize, contact Steven Herb at or visit the Pennsylvania Center for the Book website: Jurors commented, "I was surprised and astounded at each page: The content and form of the book are challenging but always rewarding, and the range of compositional techniques are ambitious and innovative. This book presents an experience of reading unlike any I have ever encountered in comics" a visually smart book. Each of the pages is a remarkable pastiche of printmaking techniques that are not self-conscious nor gimmicky, but purposeful in conveying the sober content of this narrative. Not an easy book—it takes time to absorb the work, but it is time in which to savor the nuances of each page. Six Novels in Woodcuts, the first time this nonprofit publisher has included a graphic novelist in its award-winning series. The selection jury for included John Meier, an assistant librarian in the Physical and Mathematical Sciences Library; Jarod Rosello, a cartoonist, writer and doctoral student in curriculum and instruction in the College of Education; Jean Sanders, an associate professor of art in the School of Visual Arts; Scott T. Smith, an assistant professor of English and comparative literature in the College of the Liberal Arts; and Jerry Zolten, an associate professor of communication arts and sciences and American studies at Penn State Altoona. In this book, small in size but large in vision, the art of storytelling through pure visual image is at its height. It epitomizes the whole notion of the graphic novel set forth by Lynd Ward—the illustrations are brilliant and the balance between word and image is spot on. The book encapsulates the power of comics to combine an aesthetic experience with a lovely story with strength and beauty that lies with its simplicity and subtlety.
