and bang one's head against a brick wall Fig. to waste one's time trying hard to accomplish something that is completely hopeless. You're wasting your time trying to figure this puzzle out.

Whilst other courtrooms seize up with the stale formality and impenetrable legalese, this session was awash with dramatic force that engulfed everyone present. And not in a good way. In his first public hearing in November, Mitting unequivocally stated: This has been the basis of Mitting issuing blanket anonymity to batches of undercover officers in recent months. Effectively, Mitting is saying the rights of violators are more important than the rights of the violated. Dutifully, we then go to hearings where Mitting basically goes along with what the police have recommended. He appears oblivious to the possibility that an officer might want to be anonymous because they have something to hide. The one exception was the U-turn on Rick Gibson, whose real name is to be released, but only because the Undercover Research Group presented shocking new information about him deceiving women into relationships. Without his erstwhile comrades coming forward with the name the officer had used, the groups he infiltrated and when, this investigation would have been impossible. Without that, the Inquiry is reduced to the police selectively self-reporting. The hearing earlier this month was concerned with seven officers, all of whom Mitting was intending to grant full anonymity. Counsel for the victims, Philippa Kaufmann QC, began bluntly: We are offered the bare minimum of information about them, basically just telling us that they existed. Mitting claims publishing their cover names could lead to the real names being discovered which, in turn, could lead to the risk of serious violence against the officers. HN23 was deployed against one group and reported on other groups in the s. They fear their friends and family will feel betrayed that they kept their spycop past a secret. HN40 was deployed against two groups in the last decade of the existence of the SDS ie They were prosecuted under their false name. Despite this evidence of perjury and perverting the course of justice, the Inquiry seeks to fully protect the officer. Kaufmann said the refusal to say anything at all amounted to Neither Confirm Nor Deny. It is stronger than that. It is a flat refusal to say anything about the deployment in the open. How on earth can the disclosure of that fact alone put that officer at risk? Mitting was aloof and unrelenting, waiting for her to finish speaking and simply repeating himself. She said of HN Rising to his feet, Francis contrasted the dangers faced by SDS officers with those of former drugs squad officer Neil Woods who was sitting in the public gallery. Pointing Woods out to the court, Francis expounded: He is sitting here in his own name. HN58 was the senior manager at the SDS during a crucial period in the late s. That inquiry was supposed to get to the truth and be the last word on the issue. But unbeknownst to them, the SDS was spying on the Lawrence campaign for justice, effectively trying to undermine the inquiry. Mitting gave a clear statement in November, saying that he wants this Inquiry to succeed where Macpherson and other previous processes have failed. Francis explained to the court: Like most SDS managers, he had previously been an undercover officer. We want the cover names published. With HN58, where there is evidence of wrongdoing as a manager, it suggests possible wrongdoing when he was an officer. His cover name must be published to allow the people he spied upon to come forward with their experiences. Tell us the name and let those they spied on come forward to say if there was misconduct, otherwise Mitting is conducting his own mini-trials based solely on police evidence. This is even weirder than point 1, and nobody seemed to understand what Mitting was alluding to. Exactly what he meant had to be teased out of him. Eventually he said it. The experience of life tells one that the latter person is less likely to have engaged in extra-marital affairs than the former. Does Mitting really believe that if a man has stayed married to one woman for a long time he will not have deceived women he spied on into sexual relationships? The idea that men do not hide affairs from their wives, or have arrangements where affairs are tolerated, is utterly bizarre. It is patently untrue, as we already know from other spycops. Several are known to have stayed married to the same person at least until the truth was exposed by those they spied on, including the infamous Mark Kennedy who had relationships with four women who have now reached legal settlements with the Met. He had already made the women a special case at the November hearing, saying they deserved full answers, but not mentioning any other groups of victims. Assault, identity theft, incitement, burglary, perjury and perverting the course of justice were all commonplace. Mark Ellison QC found that not only did spycops lie to courts and spy on lawyer-client meetings, they also withheld evidence that could have exonerated accused people. Officers have admitted to the Inquiry that they were arrested and prosecuted whilst undercover, yet Mitting has apparently decided this is not misconduct worthy of consideration, let alone telling the victims about. Helen Steel was deceived into a two year relationship by undercover police officer John Dines. He was only exposed through her diligent research. Having represented herself in the same courts for the McLibel trial , the longest trial in English history, Steel is now representing herself at the Undercover Policing Inquiry, but in effect she spoke for many: It is not going to get to the truth and the whole purpose of this Inquiry is to stop the human rights abuses that were being committed by these units. It is an insulting joke. His excessive faith in police integrity, and refusal to be substantially swayed from that trust, is steering the Inquiry far from its goal. In other words, if an officer is still married to the person they were with at the time of deployment then they are assumed to be blameless and will be protected from scrutiny. The Inquiry cannot fulfil its purpose like this. Something fundamental must change if there is to be any point in it at all.

Someone recently asked me if I thought most graffiti writers were really just frustrated artists like myself. This seems difficult for some people to understand - you do not paint graffiti in the vain hope that one day some big fat tory will discover you and put your pictures on his wall. If you draw on walls in public then you are already operating on a higher level. The irony is that despite having to scuttle around at night like Jack the Ripper with a marker pen, writing graffiti is about the most honest way you can be an artist. Some people think you should have better things to think about than trying to think about better things. But the instinct is still there. Life is unfair and the world is full of cripples, death and deviousness. In response to this, painting pictures seems a pointless way to spend your time. Your average plumber does more for humanity than some git that makes abstract art or paints seaside views full of boats. At least graffiti has a fighting chance of meaning a little more to people. Graffiti is one of the few tools you have if you have almost nothing. I mean, how much more useful can a painting be than that? You explore every avenue and possibility of your situation at high speed with total clarity. In the meantime we should all go shopping to console ourselves. His ferocious government had run the country emphatically for many years, crushing any signs of dissent ruthlessly. In November he was re-elected President for another five years as his supporters at Party Conference gave him forty standing ovations. On December 21st the President, disturbed by a small uprising in the western city of Timisoara in support of a Protestant Clergyman, was persuaded to address a public rally in Bucharest. One solitary man in the crowd, Nica Leon, sick to death with Ceausescu and the dreadful circumstances he created for everyone started shouting in favour of the revolutionaries in Timisoara. The crowd around him, obedient to the last, thought that when he shouted out "Long live Timisoara! They started chanting it too. It was only when he called, "Down with Ceausescu! Terrified, they tried to force themselves away from him, dropping the banners they had been carrying. In the crush the wooden batons on which the banners were held began to snap underfoot and women started screaming. The ensuing panic sounded like booing. The unthinkable was happening. Ceausescu stood there on his balcony, ludicrously frozen in uncertainty, his mouth opening and shutting. Even the official camera shook with fright. Then the head of security walked swiftly across the balcony towards him and whispered "they're getting in". This was the start of the revolution. Within a week Ceausescu was dead. I was arrested for painting a picture about corruption over a billboard. As a result I spent 40 hours in a cell with the cops taking the piss and telling me lies, followed by a spell of community service and a hefty fine for which I never got a receipt and no record appeared to be kept. There are no exceptions to the rule that everyone thinks they are an exception to the rules. Sometimes I feel like an inside-out policeman. I guess I do believe some people become cops because they want to make the world a better-looking place. But I then some people become vandals because they want to make the world, a better-looking place. It was punishment for swinging one of my classmates round and round before dropping him onto a concrete floor. The next day I was made to stand in front of the whole school at assembly while the headmaster gave a speech about good and evil before I was sent home in disgrace. The unfortunate part of this story is that I never actually touched the kid. It was my best friend Jimmy who had put him into casualty. However, Jim was a big chap for his age and could be very persuasive. So I shut up after that. The kid sustained a fractured skull and some mental problems. You will probably be punished for something you never did anyway. People get it wrong all the time. Anyone who believes in capital punishment should be shot. I was at home drawing and listening to Radio One late at night when the dj became so annoying I grabbed some paint and drove to the studios on New Cavendish Street". I started walking off as the van drove past and took the next corner. I turned back and got my paint out just as the same van pulled up again, having just gone round the block. I straightened up and walked to my car as the cops pulled up very slowly and stopped 20 yards up the road. He opens her door and she goes into the building. I turn on my engine as a cop finally gets out of the van and walks over. The driver suddenly looks a bit perturbed. A lot of people never use their initiative, because no-one told them to. Why all the bombs? A wall is a very big weapon. As we walked through a tunnel in Shoreditch someone said: We hung up some decorative signs nicked off a building in Islington and painted the walls white wearing overalls. We got the artwork up in twenty five minutes and held an opening party in Islington that week with beers and some hip hop music nipping out the back of a transit van. I had a pound for every mile that happened. I look straight ahead and keep walking but just as I get to the gate I see the blue lights start flashing and the siren goes off. When I look back I see the beaming smile of a mechanic behind the wheel, flashing me a little Jamaican smile as he hits the siren on and off again. I stand there as the blades snap off. The sharper your knife the better the stencil looks. As the Grim Reaper said to his new apprentice: Any thinner and it gets sloppy too quick. Cheap British paint is fine but some brands bleed more than others. Acting like a sad old drunk if you attract attention. I would be grateful if you could tell me where else I can catch any other pieces of your work in Shoreditch or the rest of London. I have just started work as a car park attendant, night shift in Swiss Cottage. There are a lot of crappy tags but there is great scope to do something there. I am only working there for another six weeks so if you are interested mail me. He does not appear to have understood the project brief which we supplied to you and his ideas fall somewhat short of it: Please note that the agreed design fee will not be released until all outstanding artwork relating to this project is submitted to our office. I live in Montpellier and we have two of your pieces at the end of our street. Thought you might be interested to know we had the police here last week because a neighbour was burgled and I asked them what they think of your stuff. All the best Andy Banksy I read in Level magazine that you are trying to etch graffiti into limestone but were unsure of how to do it. I did a little work with steel plate etching, we would use a jacket to coat the back of the plates to stop them dissolving. This could then be removed with meths. Ed, School of Chemistry, University of Bristol! Mindless authority figures in operation Emails should be sent to: Additional lyrics by Milton. Each and every one of them a pathetic cry for help.

If you say that you are banging your head against a brick wall or banging your head against a wall, you mean that you feel frustrated because you are not making any progress in what you are trying to do.

In an interview with Simon Hattenstone of The Guardian, Banksy is described as "white, 28, scruffy casual" wearing jeans, T-shirt, a silver tooth, silver chain and silver earring. He began as an artist at the age of 14, was expelled from school, and served time in prison for petty crime. According to Hattenstone, "anonymity is vital to him because graffiti is illegal". These days everyone is trying to be famous. But he has anonymity. Robert Del Naja, frontman of the trip hop band Massive Attack. Del Naja had been a graffiti artist during the 1990s prior to forming the band and had previously been identified as a personal friend of Banksy. The section of the hull with this picture has now been removed and is on display at the M Shed museum. The image of Death is based on a nineteenth-century etching illustrating the pestilence of The Great Stink. He claims he changed to stencilling while hiding from the police under a rubbish lorry, when he noticed the stencilled serial number [38] and by employing this technique, he soon became more widely noticed for his art around Bristol and London. It depicts a teddy bear lobbing a Molotov cocktail at three riot police. The message is usually anti-war, anti-capitalist or anti-establishment. Subjects often include rats, apes, policemen, soldiers, children, and the elderly. These oil paintings were shown at a twelve-day exhibition in Westbourne Grove, London in 2004. Approximately 1,000 people attended. Someone threw a large wad of these into a crowd at Notting Hill Carnival that year, which some recipients then tried to spend in local shops. A wad of the notes were also thrown over a fence and into the crowd near the NME signing tent at the Reading Festival. The exhibition featured a live "elephant in a room", painted in a pink and gold floral wallpaper pattern, which, according to leaflets handed out at the exhibition, was intended to draw attention to the issue of world poverty. Although the Animal Services Department had issued a permit for the elephant, after complaints from animal rights activists, the elephant appeared unpainted on the final day. Its owners rejected claims of mistreatment and said that the elephant had done "many, many movies. Following popular support, the City Council has decided it will be allowed to remain. It is listed as a mural that comes with a house attached. According to Nathan Wellard, Banksy had asked the couple if he could use the side of their home as a "large canvas", to which they agreed. In return for the "canvas", the Bristol stencil artist gave them two free tickets to the Glastonbury Festival. Jackson and John Travolta clutching bananas instead of guns. Although the image was very popular, Transport for London claimed that the graffiti created "a general atmosphere of neglect and social decay which in turn encourages crime" and their staff are "professional cleaners not professional art critics". Some time later, Banksy made a tribute artwork over this second Pulp Fiction work. The tribute was for year-old British graffiti artist Ozone who, along with fellow artist Wants, was hit by an underground train in Barking, east London on 12 January. They also wrote a note on their website saying: When we lost Ozone we lost a fearless graffiti writer and as it turns out a pretty perceptive art critic. Banksy, as expected, did not turn up to collect his award and continued with his anonymous status. It describes how a shipment of lipstick to the Bergen-Belsen concentration camp immediately after its liberation at the end of World War II helped the internees regain their humanity. The exhibition featured 62 of their paintings and prints. It was of a child painting the tag "Take this to Society!" The painting, depicting a hooded member of the Ku Klux Klan hanging from a noose, was quickly covered with black spray paint and later removed altogether. The animatronic pets in the store window include a mother hen watching over her baby Chicken McNuggets as they peck at a barbecue sauce packet, and a rabbit putting makeup on in a mirror. The council said it would remove any graffiti, regardless of the reputation of its creator, and specifically stated that Banksy "has no more right to paint graffiti than a child". Robert Davis, the chairman of the council planning committee told The Times newspaper: The image had been protected by a sheet of clear perspex; however, silver paint was poured behind the protective sheet and later tagged with the words "Banksy woz ere". The image was almost completely obliterated. It was situated on Leake Street, a road tunnel formerly used by Eurostar underneath London Waterloo station. In May, Banksy parted company with agent Steve Lazarides and announced that Pest Control, [80] the handling service who act on his behalf, would be the only point of sale for new works. On 13 June, the Banksy vs Bristol Museum show opened at Bristol City Museum and Art Gallery, featuring more than works of art, including animatronics and installations; it is his largest exhibition yet, featuring 78 new works. The mural had been commissioned for the Blur single " Crazy Beat " and the property owner, who had allowed it to be painted, was reported to have been in tears when she saw it was being painted over. The side of the building has an image of a giant rat by Banksy. The work was censored by the Transport for London TfL, forbidding display of the work with its halo, because of the prevalence of graffiti in the underground. This decline went through the press and several articles were published remarking on the progress of the poster. His works, whether he stencils them on the streets, sells them in exhibitions or hangs them in museums on the sly, are filled with wit and metaphors that transcend language barriers. They claim that they do not intend to sell the work but plan to preserve it and display it at their Detroit gallery. The last time there was a naked man covered in gold paint in my house, it was me. Many people speculated if Banksy would show up at the Oscars in disguise and make a surprise appearance if he won the Oscar. Banksy was also credited with the opening couch gag for the The Simpsons episode " MoneyBart ", depicting people working in deplorable conditions and using endangered or mythical animals to make both the episodes cel-by-cel and the merchandise connected with the program. Fox sanitised parts of the opening "for taste" and to make it less grim. In January, Banksy published the original storyboard on its website. Violent clashes had taken place between police and demonstrators in the Stokes Croft area. Banksy produced the poster ostensibly to raise money for local groups in the Stokes Croft area and to raise money for the legal defence of those arrested during the riots. News of this has reportedly caused "lots of anger" in the local community and is considered by some to be a theft. The auction is scheduled to take place in June. Better Out Than In Main article: In a note posted to his website, the artist wrote: The stall will not be there again. The booth was manned by an unknown elderly man who went about four hours before making a sale, yawning and eating lunch as people strolled by without a second glance at the work. During the visit he painted a few artworks including a kitten on the remains of a house destroyed by an Israeli air strike. And we should probably address this for all our sakes. Dismaland Banksy opened Dismaland, a large scale group show lampooning Disneyland on 21 August and permanently closed on 27 September. The "theme park" was located in Weston-super-Mare, United Kingdom. The Son of a Migrant from Syria In December, Banksy created several murals in the vicinity of Calais, France, including the so-called " Jungle " where migrants live as they attempt to enter the United Kingdom. This hotel is open to the public, and contains rooms designed by Banksy, Sami Musa and Dominique Petrin, and each of the bedrooms face the wall. It also houses a contemporary art gallery. A trademark rat running around the circumference of a clock-face, dubbed Rat race, was torn down by developers within a week of it appearing on a former bank building at West 14th Street, [] but other works, including a mural of imprisoned Turkish artists Zehra Dogan on the famed Bowery Wall and a series of others across Brooklyn, remain on display. However, shortly after the gavel dropped and it was sold, an alarm sounded inside of the picture frame and the canvas passed through a shredder hidden within the frame, partially shredding the picture.
