Banishing Bullying Behavior on the shelves in Clark University Library Many children with special needs such as the twice exceptional (2e) become the targets of bullies. Discussions in this site are designed to help parents and professionals identify 2e children and to provide meaningful intervention.

Their strategies have been captured from hands-on interaction with educators, parents and students. Their premise comes from the apocryphal village that is being ravaged by dysentery. Do you treat each person for their intestinal disorders or do you put in a sewer system? Do you work with each individual student or do you change a culture that hosts cruelty. Can you do both? The core of the book is the Student Empowerment Session that has been crafted and refined over fifteen years. The book also explores topics which include cyberbullying, children with disabilities, "mean girls," teachers who are bullies, parents who refuse to accept that their children are bullies, and academic vs. Both women are experienced, considered experts in their fields and dedicated to improving education for our young people. Bullying behavior is rampant, disruptive and can be crushing to the young learner. Fried and Sosland have studied the issues with eyes of educators and offer practical methods for addressing the problems. Their concrete and specific suggestions reach even the very young children. An earlier review by Kurtis R. Mayer suggested "Banishing Bullying Behavior" as family dinner conversation. I would take a giant step forward and suggest this book is for every parent, teacher, principal and school superintendent. I would also suggest that any person in a managerial position could improve the work place by reading "Banishing Bullying Behavior". Mayer on Feb 01, This was coauthored by a distant relative but I find it interesting even at age eighty. Its more for someone like my son and daughter who have children age 12,11, and 8. It gives the parent something to discuss at the dinner table with their children Banishing Bullying Behavior By Thelma J. Greenberg on Feb 16, "Banishing Bullying Behavior" by Suellen Fried and Blanche Sosland is an extraordinarily outstanding book which should be read by all those who are preparing to enter the field of education, as well as those who currently work in that area. This book can be especially helpful to those who plan and implement policies and programs within the schools, parents of school age children, social workers, and counselors, as well as anyone who has contact with and wishes to be an advocate for children. Fried and Sosland give numerous examples and helpful approaches to dealing with bullying behavior. They also include discussion of children with special needs and those who are considered twice-exceptional. I was especially impressed with their revision of a old phrase to a new and very perceptive one to teach children: As a retired educator and a former school board member, I give this book my highest praise and recommendation. By Jerrold Bernard on Mar 08, Banishing Bullying Behavior is a must-read, whether the topic is of interest to you from afar, or whether it personally affects you or people close to you. The authors do a great job of providing background information regarding bullying, and data concerning its impact. Most importantly, the book provides tangible tactics and strategies for how to avoid being the object of a bully, what to do if you are, and how to prevent your children from becoming bullies. Suellen Fried and Blanche Sosland provide research-based recommendations and strategies, delivered in a way that people of all ages can understand and apply. As a parent of school-age children, I encourage everyone to share it with teachers and principals, as well as with other family members. Timely Topic By L. Norris on Mar 30, The authors have created an excellent, must-have guide for teachers, parents and employers to help detect and stop bullying of all kinds. We all must be constantly vigilant whether in our workplaces or schools or neighborhoods or computer sites. Just this week two stories appeared in our newspaper relating the tragic suicides of two teenagers subjected to severe bullying. This book nails the behaviors, offers excellent strategies and provides reliable resources. The reader immediately knows from page one that these authors are highly experienced professionals, yet are caring, approachable women who are passionate in their desire to provide tools to help all of us stop this terrible behavior. It provides us with pertinent research, a thorough source of current information about bullying in general, so many real life "stories" and examples from kids, and it is a very "hands on" book giving specific ways to deal with and prevent bullying. They discuss something they call the "stickiness" factor. This suggests that giving real life emotive stories to explain their important points is a very effective method to use. One of the unique things about this book is that it can be a resource for all categories of people: I feel it should be a requirement for all student teachers and it would best be used prior to the semester of student teaching. In addition to being a wealth of information and activities, it can be used to help create a classroom climate that will allow real learning to take place. Insight and Inspiration By Ruth Fost on Feb 01, This accessible and most "read-able" book offers insight and inspiration to implement change in our approach to bully behavior. It is fresh, new and filled with ideas and strategies for change. I recommend it as an indispensable source and resource for anyone in any field of work or play that involves a child or children of any age. Kasner on Jul 31, Fried and Sosland have thoroughly researched this growing problem. They have written a comprehensive, yet concise, eminently readable and practical blueprint for eliminating bullying behavior. Their book is a must read for educators and all others who work with children. This particular edition is in a Hardcover format. To buy this book at the lowest price, Click Here.

Banishing Bullying Behavior challenges students, parents, educators, education support professionals, administrators, counselors, and policy makers to confront the culture of cruelty that is devastating our society.

Often visitors to our school compliment our students and our staff on the good manners and friendly smiles from our Kettering students. Even in a great school like ours, we realize that bullying happens and we must teach children that bullying behavior is unacceptable. Bullies tend to have these traits in common: They like to dominate other people. They like to use people to get what they want. There is no empathy or compassion. They view weaker siblings and peers as prey. They refuse to accept responsibility for their actions. They lack the foresight to see the consequences of their actions. There is a difference between taunting and teasing. Kids who are bullied come in all shapes and sizes: What they have in common is that they are singled out because they are different in some way. Most adults can think of a time when they were on the receiving end of some sort of bullying. Most kids will not tell an adult outright if they are being bullied. They may give you clues with their behavior. Children who bully need to learn new ways of thinking and behaving. There are many ways parents can help when these behaviors start to surface. Create opportunities for the child to do good things for others. Closely monitor TV viewing, video game playing, computer activities, and music. Engage in more constructive, entertaining, and energizing activities. They come to know the blessings of gentleness, of sympathy, of patience and kindness, of support and backing, first through the way in which they themselves are treated. Let us commit to work together at Kettering Elementary, a community of caring adults and children, to banish bully behavior. All of our children deserve to come to a learning environment where they feel safe and free from being bullied at all times.
