The Belle Isle Aquarium is a public aquarium located in Belle Isle Park in Detroit, Michigan. Designed by architect Albert Kahn, it opened on August 18, , and was the oldest continually operating public aquarium in North America when it closed on April 3,

My great-grandma always liked a good fight, so she would complain about the noise. Then there was a newspaper article about it, with a photo on the front page of my great-grandmother and her youngest son Jack sitting on her lap. There are various explanations as to the cause of the explosion, ranging from it being a labor dispute to a deliberate act to rattle my great-grandmother. My uncle Ken says it was the Jersey Creamery. Then it was off to the Detroit Arts Festival. As I was walking to the festival from my car, I decided to stop in the Detroit Public Library and see if there were old telephone books that might at least give the name of the creamery. So I entered the library about 1 PM, and before I knew it, the library staff were coming around at 5: Regardless, I was able to find out several things. First of all, there was in fact a creamery, and I have the map to prove it click on the photo to enlarge. In the map there was a vacant lot where the creamery is in this map which I think is the map? In the City Directory, Daniel M. Bieke is listed as living at Field Street, while his brother Frank J. Bieke lived next door at Field. In the City Directory, Albert L. Sharpe is listed as living at Field Street, right next door to the creamery. So I was thinking that maybe this creamery on Field Street was unnamed and doing contract work for the Belle Isle Creamery? But now I know I was simply looking ten years too early. On an unrelated note, I checked out some of the earlier City Directories. In the directory, Frank Bieke [my great-great grandfather] was listed as a pedlar residing at Maple. His brother Joseph, a carpenter, is living at the s. I also checked the directory. Well, I found John Bicke, a laborer, who lived at the rear alley entrance of a place at Napoleon. Is that the same person? Would a guy named Augustin use John as his first name? Your guess is as good as mine. Posted by Frank Goeddeke, Jr.

The prominent American urban park designer Frederick Law Olmsted created a design for the island in the s. He was known for his design of Central Park in New York. But only some elements of his design were completed. The Belle Isle Casino building is not a gambling facility but rather, is used for occasional public events. Both the conservatory and the adjacent aquarium were designed by Detroit architect Albert Kahn , who designed city landmarks such as Cadillac Place and the Ford Rouge Factory. It was demolished in One night in , Byron Carter of Cartercar stopped to help a stranded motorist on Belle Isle. When he cranked her Cadillac , it kicked back and broke his jaw. Complications from the injury resulted in pneumonia and he died. The incident motivated Henry Leland , founder of Cadillac Motors, to state that "The Cadillac car will kill no more men if we can help it". He hired Charles Kettering , who established Delco and developed the electric self-starter. This soon became standard on all automobiles. The island was temporarily renamed Bella Jima, and Detroiters were treated to the sight of an island invasion without the bloodshed. It was conducted after the invasion of Iwo Jima. It was named for the president of the Lakes Carriers Association, who advocated safety and navigational improvements in Great Lakes shipping. At one time, the island housed a canoe concession, which provided rental canoes and stored private ones. Canoe riders often stopped at the nearby Remick Band Shell, which hosted regular concerts from to The band shell replaced an earlier facility and provided more amenities for performers and audience members. The marina and building are currently closed, and only rowing activities still occur at that location. The Belle Isle Golf Course opened in The Detroit Yacht Club building dates to and still houses an active private sailing club; it also offers swimming and other country club amenities. The Activities Building was the site of a restaurant. The Flynn Pavilion was designed by Eero Saarinen and used for ice skating rental. A ferry service to the island existed from 1882, although the bridge was completed to the island in 1929. Riding stables were housed in an market building that was relocated from Detroit to the island in the s. The building was disassembled and stored by Greenfield Village in the s. The park headquarters and police station are each located in s-era houses. Many fallow deer including the "white" variety were formerly widespread on the island The island was home to a large herd of European fallow deer from the s. But, this isolated population fell prey to disease at the close of the 20th century as a result of cyclic inbreeding. In 1970, the last of the animals were captured and moved to the Detroit Zoo and nature center, located on Belle Isle. It originally opened on August 18, 1856, and was the oldest continually operating public aquarium in North America when it closed on April 3, 1970. The aquarium was operated by the Detroit Zoological Society prior to the closure. It is open to the public from 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. After years of problems, in 1970, the city of Detroit declared bankruptcy. As part of the process, the state proposed taking over Belle Isle and converting it into a state park. It set a day transition period beginning on December 1, 1970, to turn the park operations over to the state. As a state park, it now requires users entering by car or motorcycle to either pay the standard state park user entrance fee or to have a Michigan Recreational Passport sticker on the license plate of their vehicles. There is no charge for those who walk, bicycle or jog to the park. Belle Isle was the top-visited state park in Michigan in 1999, receiving more than 4 million visitors.
