By Janine Rogan Updated October 16, 2012: The societies of both Canada and the United States hold the view that their own country is the better place to live. Generally, neither country learns all the facts about what the other country has to offer. So, which is better: Canada or the United States? Benefits Becoming a mother is one of the greatest gifts in the world. Spending time with your child as he or she grows up is a need of every mother. How does your country support new moms? Canada Canada has paid leave, and many employers offer benefits to new mothers, or parents, ranging from 17 weeks up to as much as 52 weeks. During this time, one of the spouses can claim Employment Insurance EI for approximately 15 weeks. Parents can also split the allocated time if they choose. While its northerly neighbors have a solid set of maternity and parental benefits , the United States currently does not mandate any sort of maternity leave. While this 12 weeks of unpaid leave is not specifically categorized as maternity leave, it can be used under the FMLA as such. Small companies of under 50 employees are exempt from the FMLA. Some states such as California and New Jersey include paid maternity benefits into their disability insurance , but this choice is solely at the discretion of each state. Services Some of the more well-known services available to Canadians and Americans are healthcare and university funding. The United States is ranked No. Conversely, Canada ranks No. It puts many students tens of thousands of dollars in debt. Individual states have the choice on whether or not they want to grant funding to large state-run universities. Despite these grants, schooling is still very expensive for the average American. Average Salaries According to the website numbeo. The real difference is seen in the cost of living. While Americans and Canadians roughly make the same amount per annum, there are large gaps in specific spending areas of both countries. Food is much more costly in Canada. Finally, clothing is more expensive in Canada than in the United States. By this measure, the U. The Bottom Line Canadians receive better social benefits such as healthcare, paid maternity leave and greater subsidization of their post-secondary schools. Both countries generally have around the same annual income. However, the cost of living in the United States is remarkably less. While Canadians may pay less for larger-life events, Americans pay less for day-to-day expenses such as eating and housing costs. Maybe it all evens out in the end, or perhaps one place really is better to live than the other. If you plan on having many children and need the help putting them all through school, Canada may be the more suitable choice for your family. Whichever the case, the choice should be made on the basis of what you value most. Take into consideration your current and future lifestyle. Trading Center Want to learn how to invest? 2: 12 reasons why living in Washington is better than living in Oregon | The Seattle Times

Better Places To Live. Welcome. We are located in Lansing, MI. A rejuvenation has begun in downtown Lansing and it has never been a better time to live close to the action.

Washington is the better state, after all. Share story Brian J. Cantwell Seattle Times travel writer Sunday update: And remember, you started it. And, aha, it has its own national park — a place of such splendor it was the fourth national park in the United States. Oregon has, oh, just one national park: Crater Lake, known for a deep hole in the ground. And before we leave the subject of Mount Rainier — which is hard to get away from — it reminds us: We have a place called Paradise. Oregon has places called Boring and Drain. Washingtonians can sail for hours in one direction on Puget Sound and the Salish Sea, without having to tack every 5 minutes. Ever sailed on the Columbia or the Willamette? Portland might revel in being weird. Yakima Valley hops such as these flavor beers made around the world. Portland and Bend claim to be the craft-brewing capitals of the universe. A commanding view of the Columbia River is seen from atop the Benches vineyard, on the Washington side of the Columbia Gorge. Across the river is Oregon. Speaking of a spirited place to live: Washington state is the second largest producer of premium wines in the United States, with more than licensed wineries producing almost 15 million cases annually. Oregon has about wineries producing one-fifth as much vino fino. Oregon makes a big deal about having no sales tax, which we admit makes things easier for the math-challenged at the cash register. Meanwhile, those poor suckers south of the Columbia are doling out as much as 9.

The European country has inspired the envy of the rest of the working world by enacting a new labour deal that encourages an estimated , employees in the tech and consulting sectors to disconnect from work emails and calls after-hours. While America is good at a lot of things, creating a culture of healthy work-life balance is not one of them. Burnout has been called the "disease of our civilization. And yet so often, we still celebrate stress, sleep deprivation, and overworking as badges of honor and signs of personal worth. A number of other countries are way ahead of the curve when it comes to enacting policies to foster healthier workplaces and support the health, happiness and productivity of their workers. As Americans, we might do well to take a page from their book. Here are five things Americans could stand to learn from other countries about working and living well. France is encouraging workers to unplug during off-hours. Many of us know the feeling of adding hours to our workweek by checking and sending emails after hours and late at night. According to one survey, a whopping 81 percent of U. In France, that concern is being taking seriously. The agreement will extend to roughly , employees in technology and consulting -- including Google, Facebook and Deloitte -- The Guardian reported. In a Guardian poll, 67 percent of readers said that they thought the new initiative was a good idea. Sweden is experimenting with shorter work days. Currently, government officials are debating the idea of implementing a hour work week as a way to boost well-being and profits. On a smaller scale, the city of Gothenburg is considering a large-scale experiment in work-life balance. The government, for a year, would divide municipal workers into two groups: Those working the traditional eight-hour work day, and another group working a six-hour day, at the same pay rate. A city councilor noted that the shorter work days might decrease the number of sick days taken and improve employee health and efficiency. Several countries give their workers six weeks of paid vacation per year. Full-time American workers get an average of 8. But certain other nations take their vacation time very seriously. In Brazil, Lithuania, Finland, France and Russia, employees who have worked more than 10 years at the same company get at least 40 days off, CNN reported. Switzerland invests in on-the-job education and training programs. Giving employees opportunities to grow and develop their skills may be a significant factor in keeping engagement and job satisfaction high. The Swiss system also succeeds in supporting citizens who work in small businesses and want to become entrepreneurs. Denmark ranks first in the world in childcare services -- the government provides "universal nursery care" to all citizens, a major step toward better work-life balance for working parents. New parents and caretakers are also given one year worth of paid leave after birth or adoption, with flexibility in how the time is taken. No wonder the small Scandinavian country was recently found to be the happiest in the world. A previous version of this article cited reporting by the Guardian about a new French labor agreement regarding employee use of work email after regular hours.

I have always wanted to change the world. I remember being four years old, sitting glued to the television on Sunday mornings, not watching cartoons, but utterly captivated by World Vision. I cried about the injustices in the world, and begged my mother to let me sponsor Maria, the girl with the large, sad eyes who was around my age. Having been raised in a middle-class community of about people in rural Newfoundland, I had never seen a stark divide between the rich and the poor. We all seemed to be the same to my four-year-old eyes. My heart broke for Maria, and all of the other children on the show. I vowed to myself that someday, I was going to help people like her. Throughout my childhood, I told everyone that I wanted to change the world. I started volunteering in elementary school, and became a vegetarian at the age of 10. As time went on, people around me began to criticize less, and many friends and family members decided to try some of the things I was advocating. Each time I did something to make a positive impact, it left me wanting to do more. You may think that you need to be a world leader or a billionaire in order to make a difference. I always believed that being a good person is about the small things. You can volunteer as few hours as you would like! You can find an organization within your community, or you can even volunteer online, through websites that will allow you to help for even a few minutes at a time. This can be one of the most satisfying ways to make a difference. You can literally save a life with just an hour of your time. There are so many places and ways you can donate your used clothing. Some organizations even offer pick up services, Donate them to a homeless shelter, or an organization that sells them to raise funds. This can be such a rewarding experience. Spread the word about various causes in your community. See an interesting fundraiser that an organization is hosting? Share it on Facebook! There are so many ways you can help an organization with just the click of a mouse. Donate something you made to an organization that can use it. I make jewelry, hats, scarves, and other crafty things in my free time. You have talents—use them! Join a bone marrow registry. Small acts of kindness can go a long way in making the world a better place. Think about a time when someone did something unexpected for you that brightened your day. Send someone a kind message. Give a small gift. Make something for someone. Tell someone how much they mean to you. Many people will argue with the validity of this strategy to improve the world; however, what you buy reflects what you value. Or, buy organic food products. There are many ways you can change your diet to reflect your values. Make your purchases support your values. Every purchase you make supports something. You can either support a large business that exploits people, animals, and the environment, or you can buy items that are local, organic, or fair-trade. These are just a handful of the thousands of ways you can make the world a better place! Just remember that every single thing you do makes a difference.
