1: Faculty, Staff and Council - Urban Studies Program - Simon Fraser University

Black Politics in New Deal Atlanta is a well-researched, well-written, and important book that will interest students of African American, urban, and southern history

Wednesdays and Fridays, Course Description and Objectives This seminar exposes graduate students to a variety of methodologies and approaches to the history of the United States in the twentieth century through some of the most influential recent scholarship on the subject. The readings and topics for discussion are arranged both chronologically and thematically, and offer a sampling of cultural, diplomatic, intellectual, political, and social history. It is important to note, however, that the list of readings below both required and supplemental is in no way exhaustive. Rather, the readings are intended to provide an introduction to the various issues they address. Moreover, even a cursory look at the readings will reveal that there is a great deal of overlap in the categories and divisions I have made below. Lastly, be aware that this course is a readings seminar, not a research seminar. That means we will spend our time analyzing, discussing, and interpreting professional historical writing on a range of topics and issues. By the end of the course, students should be prepared to: Each student will need to read all the materials listed under the "Common Readings" heading and participate in and contribute to the weekly class discussions in a thoughtful and respectful manner. As part of their participation requirement, each student will be responsible for leading class discussion at least twice during the semester. Beyond general participation, students will complete the following assignments. Each student will be responsible for writing two reviews typed, double-spaced pages each of books found on the lists of supplemental readings. These reviews should be more than just summaries of the readings: Doing so will give all members of the class, but especially the professor and the class leader, time to read the review before class and to utilize it in class preparation. When choosing which supplemental books to write on, students should of course take into consideration their own research interests, and if possible choose topics or works that might be of use to them beyond this specific class. Finally, each student will be responsible for writing two historiographical essays of approximately 10 pages in length. One or in some cases two students each week depending on enrollment will be assigned the task of writing an essay that assesses books from the supplemental readings list as well as the common readings for the week. These papers are intended to provide the class with a broad overview of the scholarship on the topic under discussion--to identify the dominant trends in that particular area of research, the major questions scholars have sought to answer, the arguments that have been put forth in response to those questions, and possible gaps in the scholarship and areas for further research. As with the individual book reviews, students will have the opportunity to discuss their papers in class. These papers will be due no later than twenty-four hours before the class in which they will be discussed. It is imperative that this deadline be observed, as the professor and the class leader for each week will depend on having these papers available in time to set the agenda for class discussion. Attendance is mandatory, and students will be penalized for unexcused absences. Assignments must be turned in by the scheduled deadlines, as they will be used for class preparation. Unexcused late assignments will be penalized one letter grade per day they are late. Please do not hesitate to contact me if you have any questions about any of the assignments or about any other aspect of the class or your performance in it. Readings Listed below are the required books for purchase for this semester. I have ordered them through Gator Textbooks, Inc. Please note that articles listed in the course schedule below as "available online" can be found online by searching the UF library catalogue and databases under the journal title, JSTOR, Project Muse, or The History Cooperative. Alan Brinkley, The End of Reform: Knopf, Michael Denning, Cultural Front: Hunt, Ideology and U.
