Confession Blogs are a type of single topic blog where people can submit confessions. While some sites require registration, most of these sites operate anonymously. On Tumblr, confession blogs are often populated by anonymous submissions and relegated to a certain topic or fandom.

I had my first day at my new job today. The Salon is great and staff are lovely so all in all a very good day on my end! So, ramble over, onto the questions. When did you start your blog? Have you had any past online presence before Other blog, YouTube? Oh where to begin? I also had the Ramble Corner, which was going to be dedicated to lifestyle posts. Confusing enough for you? Why did you start a blog? I started my first blog because I wanted a little place on the internet to ramble on about beauty and fashion instead of endlessly spouting information to my friends and family. When did you become serious about starting a blog? As I said, it can be an amazing thing and it has opened so many doors for me, blogging was a huge advantage point in the interview for the Salon I now work for. A good blog takes work and motivation, but it should also be fun. I look at anything else that comes along with it as an unexpected and fantastic bonus! What was your first post? What has been your biggest challenge about blogging? But as I said, I was in College when I started blogging and anyone that did know about it was quite interested. Where do you see your blog in one year? What is the most rewarding thing to you about blogging? This would definitely be reading all the sweet comments, tweets and emails from my lovely followers. It still amazes me that people all over the world actually read what I have to say! What is the most discouraging thing that happens to you? I think you should try not to let anything discourage you or get you down, your blog is your hobby and you should enjoy it! My inspiration is usually other bloggers. Blogging is something I do as a hobby and I love it. I hope you enjoyed reading this as much as I enjoyed writing it!

2: Confessions – Blogs, Pictures, and more on WordPress

Happy Saturday and welcome to the fifth episode of the 'Blogger Confessions' interview series on the blog. Today, I'm bringing in J from Time In The Market to talk about blogging and how he's managed to keep everything straight as a personal finance blogger.

Kelan and Brittany, take it away. Blogger Confessions with The Savvy Couple 1: In at least words, describe the target audience of your blog. We help moms learn how to budget their money and save like crazy. We also teach stay-at-home parents how to make money from home so they can help support their family alongside their spouse. We share new budget-friendly meals, DIY projects, and home hacks with our savvy readers. What makes your blog different from other blogs in the PF blogosphere? I think when it comes to differentiating yourself in the blogging world, it almost always comes back to how you share your story. Brittany and I started dating back when we were in 9th grade, went to college together, got married, bought our first house, and now have our first baby together. We have a ton to share about making a marriage successful! But I think what really differentiates us is the fact that I left my law enforcement job to become a full-time blogger. We leveraged our frugal living habits and savings to allow me to follow my dream and start an online business. Imposter syndrome and focusing on the wrong things. The moment I started focusing on our readers and the relationship we had with them is when we started to have some incredible months. Find your story and tell it while giving as much value as possible to your readers. Do you publish your net worth on your blog? Why or why not? But now that you have my mind thinking I think we should start a series on our net worth. Have you monetized your blog ads, affiliate marketing, etc? Yes, we have monetized our blog. We primarily make our money through ads, sponsorships, and affiliate marketing in that order. We are working on our first blogging course so we hope to add a bunch of revenue in from selling our own products. Would you rather be loved, hated or controversial? I am a lover, so I would much rather be loved. We treat our readers as if they are our best friend. We do write on a couple of topics that are controversial and those have been some great articles. Who would you be horrified to know read your blog? I used to care what people thought far more than I do now. It has done very well and was featured on Rockstar finance. I get to share a little of my testimonial within the article so that is very special to me. Having this platform of reaching hundreds of thousands of people is very powerful. So to know I am using my God-given talents and sharing my testimony is exciting to me. My least favorite has probably been deleted after our audit so I am not sure, haha. Explain your writing process We normally come up with an idea and keep a long list in our Trello account. From there, we push it through our workflow. We write all of our articles in Google Docs. The last thing we do is have each other read over our work and then schedule it for publication. Our rule is nothing gets published without someone else checking the work. A normal article start to finish takes anywhere from hours. What is your favorite blog in the PF blogosphere other than your own! This is a really tough question and there is no way I can narrow it down to one. Want to participate in Blogger Confessions? Click here to find out more about how to submit an interview.

3: Secret Confessions – Confess your deepest, darkest secret s British rock band the Outfield weren't technically a one-hit wonder. But their smash "Your Love" was so hooking and omnipresent that it effectively eclipsed their other several.

J, take it away. In at least words, describe the target audience of your blog. Time in the market is a long-term investing blog written by a lazy man. The target audience is beginner investors, lazy people like myself and people who are interested in early retirement but think it requires too much sacrifice to get there. What makes your blog different from other blogs in the PF blogosphere? I come from Poland, the land of post-communist comedy and that sort of style of humor is rare. As I mentioned above, I am a lazy man so consistency in writing has been my struggle. Do you publish your net worth on your blog? Why or why not? I plan to be more open with that as the blog grows, especially around what sort of income it took to get there. Have you monetized your blog ads, affiliate marketing, etc? I have a few ads and some affiliate links here and there but nothing crazy. Would you rather be loved, hated or controversial? The goal is to spark a conversation over just saying something that people already agree with. Who would you be horrified to know read your blog? I think people at work. Most embarrassing is maybe my career related posts or my about series since they reveal more about me as a person. On a side note, I have to continue my about series sometime soon! My review process is to go back and re-read it and edit as I go along. What is your favorite blog in the PF blogosphere other than your own! I find myself reading Tom at Dividends Diversity all the time. Want to participate in Blogger Confessions? Click here to find out more about how to submit an interview. Happy Saturday and welcome to the fourth episode of the 'Blogger Confessions' interview series on the blog. Today, I'm bringing in Kelan & Brittany Kline from The Savvy Couple to talk about blogging and how.

Anyone who believes that he alone can cure his spiritual diseases has isolated himself from a Mystery of the Church and will come to ruin. Only with the help of others are we saved, for within the Christian faith, salvation comes not in a self-focused void, but in the collective nature that is the Church. The Mystery of Confession, established by Our Lord, is a clear sign of the biblical truth that we need the Church, and we need the Mystery of Confession. Since the goal of the Christian life is transformation in Christ, ridding ourselves of the corrupt and diseased fallen self, it must begin with the death of the ego. We humble ourselves before the priest when we confess our sins. Christ hears us because of our act of humility in baring our souls in front of another person. When He came to it, He found nothing but leaves, for it was not the season for figs. Jesus Cleanses the Temple 15 So they came to Jerusalem. Then Jesus went into the temple and began to drive out those who bought and sold in the temple, and overturned the tables of the money changers and the seats of those who sold doves. The Lesson of the Withered Fig Tree 20 Now in the morning, as they passed by, they saw the fig tree dried up from the roots. The fig tree which You cursed has withered away.

The Mystery of Confession, established by Our Lord, is a clear sign of the biblical truth that we need the Church, and we need the Mystery of Confession. In confession we do not simply regret past evil but recognize the darÂ-kened vision of our own condition, in which sin, by sepaÂ-rating us from God, has reduced us to a divided, autoÂ-nomous.
