History Toponymy Bolton is a common Northern English name derived from the Old English bothl-tun, meaning a settlement with a dwelling. The Romans built roads from Manchester to Ribchester to the east and a road along what is now the A6 to the west. It is claimed that Agricola built a fort at Blackrod by clearing land above the forest. Evidence of a Saxon settlement exists in the form of religious objects found when the Victorian parish church was built. It became the property of the Pilkingtons who forfeited it in the Civil War and after that the Stanleys who became Earls of Derby. The second wave of settlers wove fustian, a rough cloth made of linen and cotton. The attack became known as the Bolton Massacre in which 1, died, were taken prisoner and the town plundered. Streams draining the surrounding moorland into the River Croal provided the water necessary for the bleach works that were a feature of this area. Bolton and the surrounding villages had more than thirty bleachworks including the Lever Bank Bleach Works in the Irwell Valley. Self-acting mules were used in Bolton mills until the s producing fine yarn. The Bolton and Leigh Railway, the oldest in Lancashire, opened to goods traffic in and Great Moor Street station opened to passengers in The railway initially connected Bolton to the Leeds and Liverpool Canal in Leigh, an important link with the port of Liverpool for the import of raw cotton from America, but was extended in to link up with the Manchester to Liverpool Line. In August Bolton was besieged by Chartist rioters and the Riot Act was read and special constables sworn in. The mayor accompanied soldiers called to rescue special constables at Little Bolton Town Hall, which was besieged by a mob, and the incident ended without bloodshed. About 9, men were employed in the industry, half of them working for Dobson and Barlow in Kay Street. The firm made textile machinery. A brief upturn after the Second World War was not sustained, and the industry had virtually vanished by the end of the 20th century. During the night of 26 September, Bolton was the target for an aerial offensive. L21, a Zeppelin commanded by Oberleutnant Kurt Frankenburg of the Imperial German Navy, dropped twenty-one bombs on the town, five of them on the working class area of Kirk Street, killing thirteen residents and destroying six houses. Further attacks followed on other parts of the town, including three incendiaries dropped close to the Town Hall. Lever restored the dilapidated building and presented it to the town in, having turned it into a museum furnished with household goods typical of domestic family life in the 16th and 17th centuries. In, Lever consulted Thomas Mawson, landscape architect and lecturer in Landscape Design at the University of Liverpool, regarding town planning in Bolton. Mawson published "Bolton - a Study in Town Planning and Civic Art" and gave lectures entitled "Bolton Housing and Town Planning Society" which formed the basis of an illustrated book "Bolton - as it is and as it might be". The council declined in favour of extending the town hall and building the civic centre. It continued using existing poorhouses at Fletcher Street and Turton but in started to build a new workhouse at Fishpool Farm in Farnworth. Townleys Hospital was built on the site which is now Royal Bolton Hospital. Further additions were made adding part of Rumworth in and part of Halliwell in As of there are forty Labour councillors, sixteen Conservatives and three Liberal Democrats, with one seat remaining vacant. The Bolton constituency was represented by two Members of Parliament. At the same time major boundary changes also took place to Bolton West, which took over most of the former Westhoughton constituency. The early name, Bolton le Moors, described the position of the town amid the low hills on the edge of the West Pennine Moors southeast of Rivington Pike m. Bolton lies on relatively flat land on both sides of the clough or steep-banked valley through which the River Croal flows in a southeasterly direction towards the River Irwell.
