1: How to Plan Your Wedding Without Going Nuts | BridalGuide

Edited by Diane Forden. For the first time, the experts at Bridal Guide, America's leading bridal magazine, have gathered all of their favorite cost-containing tips and stress-reducing strategies into one handy volume.

Your daughter is engaged. The Mother of the Bride Guide: Here, author and wedding planner Kate Martin explains how to tackle the wedding expenses. Oh, How Times Have Changed! The reality of who assumes what expenses in a typical wedding is not always bound by tradition. Another bonus for a bride who has the money to spend on her own wedding is that she can either go all out and plan an extravagant affair or go to the other extreme and plan a very simple event. If you want to contribute, they may accept or refuse. Help Wanted Photo Credit: Tracey Ann Photography What about the bride and groom who are able to pay for part of the wedding but are also expecting some help from one or both sets of parents? How do you go about splitting the bill three ways? Does it have to be exactly even? Who takes the initiative on which parts? Once both sets of parents are on board, one of several situations will present itself: This route is highly recommended to make sure they have the wedding of their dreams. What happens in the end will be the result of who trusts whom and who feels comfortable doing what. Sometimes the end result is a fairy-tale wedding; other times, the planning process is so nightmarish that the couple wishes they had eloped. It is your role as MOB to help your daughter navigate this process. Their family, however, may not be on the same page. You might end up playing referee. Hopefully, she already will have made the first foray into the topic with her future in-laws. But nowadays, a wedding fund is more likely to be something a daughter only hopes exists. Home equity loans can be lifesavers In this transaction, homeowners can borrow a percentage of the value of their home to pay off higher-interest loans or large debts. The interest on the loan is usually tax-deductible. If you fall behind on your payments for whatever reason, you might find yourself packing your bags. Is it advisable, then, to pay cash for a wedding? While it is smart to set a budget and a spending limit while simultaneously deciding which areas of the wedding are priority issues does your daughter want stretch limos for the wedding party and the families, or would she rather spend that money on an open bar? The chances of your being reunited with your dough are much better in this instance. And of course, always, always get a receipt and put it away somewhere safe. Maybe you can pay for half of the wedding or just a small amount. You have to be realistic. You did not get to this point in your life to burden yourself with debt just because your daughter wants to celebrate her marriage in high style. Your daughter probably knows you best and will already have a pretty good idea as to what you can actually afford. So take the time to figure out the wedding budget and who will be paying for what after you have assessed how much you can contribute. This will undoubtedly be better than going into debt and selling off all of your valuables! Used by permission of the publisher. Log in or register to post comments Related Articles.

The Broke-Ass Bride's Wedding Guide empowers couples with the simple philosophy that it's not about how much you spend but how you spend it. As author Dana LaRue says, "You're only planning a party, so have fun with it."

Here, Dana shares her advice on how to dive into the wedding planning process with your groom. After getting engaged, you and your intended need to hash out who wants to be responsible for what parts of the plan, and how involved either of you want to be with respect to the details. Hands-off, total agreement, nod-and-smile-style support. Brainstorm his talents and interests and break up the duties accordingly. Who can research on the Internet like a boss? Who has a better eye for design? Figure out who cares more about what. If your partner is a typography or graphics nerd, let him take the lead on the invitation selection or design. Discuss going on a "spending diet" to help you save for the wedding. Blogger Anna Newell Jones of "And Then We Saved" suggests that you and your partner write down your "needs" for each month rent, utilities, insurance, groceries, gas, etc. Anything left over each month goes into your savings for the wedding! Remember, you are a team. Thus, teamwork is to be expected. And there is no i in "teamwork," but there is an ass in "forced assistance. If rewards-based systems work for you, work out one of those, too. Planning can be fun and mutually beneficial! Discuss how to manage any possible disagreements that may come up. This brings us to one of my favorite, and most commonly used, words in wedding planning: And if it comes down to a stalemate between the two of you, find the least biased, most trustworthy third party possible to be your tie-breaker, or flip a coin and suck it up if you lose. In her signature sassy, chatty voice, author Dana LaRue gives hardworking and helpful tips, such as how to negotiate with vendors like a pro, and ideas for inventive and affordable engagement parties, DIY recipes, decorations, and more. Click here to learn how to save more money, buy a home and more. If yours is among those one in three engagements occurring between Thanksgiving and the New Year, now is a smart time to kick off your plan, since it can take months to nail down the perfect wedding venue, dress or suit, band or DJ and any number of other items on your to-do list. Some of the tricky aspects of wedding planning remain the same as in past years — from planning the guest list to creating a registry. But you might be one of the growing ranks of couples today more interested in the emotional experience of their wedding than the opulence. Personal touches, like giving away hand-crocheted hats as wedding favors — as one Florida bride did — could be a meaningful way to connect with guests, without breaking the bank. Whether you choose a more personalized wedding or a more traditional one, there are always ways to save money. After all, no one wants to start a new life together broke from the wedding. With that in mind, here are five ways to keep your budget under control, while making the nuptials memorable for all. Start with a simple dollar limit — and decide who will pay what. Before you make a single purchase, calculate your overall budget. Then get ready to stick to it. The best way to prevent this is loads of planning ahead of time: The Knot has a wedding planning app that allows you to enter both estimated and actual costs. What about who will pay? Many people count on parents or guardians to help foot the bill: Parents want to feel good about helping their kids with their wedding. Being asked is part of that good feeling for many parents. Make tweaks, deciding what to splurge on and where to skimp. A key trick to staying under budget is to select two or three priorities you really want for your wedding and use them as the starting point for your budget. Couples also said they overspent on catering, invitations, hair and makeup, but wished they spent more on the photographer, band or DJ. Purchase cake or booze from one of the warehouse stores and save thousands. Hiring TaskRabbit to serve and clean up will make life easier without a huge cost. Slash your flower budget. Many people regret spending too much on flowers, Zola found, which may have to do with their high price. But there are ways to avoid dropping thousands of dollars on flowers. Everyone had a great time and no one noticed! Add some fresh greenery and pinecones and you can still have an elegant centerpiece. Candles make a beautiful and inexpensive alternative to flowers. Negotiate wedding costs like a pro. While you should always look for the lowest price possible, most wedding vendor costs are pretty fixed. Explore what the vendor can provide within your budget and you may be surprised. When working with wedding vendors, your delivery is key to getting what you want on your budget. Event planner Wynn Austin told Bridal Guide to steer clear of asking for the cheapest price possible or demanding why the vendor charges so much. Do you have any recommendations on any changes that we can make to help bring the cost down? Add a touch of personality. A personalized wedding can also mean a more budget-friendly event. One emerging trend is to find an alternative venue to the typical country club or hotel ballroom location, Kay said. Or some couples who met in college are returning to campus to have the ceremony at the college chapel. Elegance meets rustic charm with a barn wedding. One Mic editor found a way to pay for his upcoming honeymoon using credit card points. Now he can use his points to pay for honeymoon travel and food. Plus, both cards give you extra points for travel and dining, which have extra value when redeemed through the Chase Ultimate Rewards portal. Get creative with the honeymoon too. Annual fees and interest rates on unpaid balances can wipe out any savings you get from the signup bonuses and points. And try to stick with one at a time, as opening multiple cards at once can temporarily ding your credit score.
