Hide Post Back to the electrical system since it was brought up. Not engine rpm, but the rpm the thing is turning at. You can game that system with different size pulleys to achieve what you seek. Some tiny cars have amp alternators. You need or will want one that can produce its rated output for a longer time. Its also why you sometimes see folks winching take a break and sit around doing nothing but catching their breath. It lets the truck catch its breath, too. One fun little test is to try to hold the various wires to see how hot they get. Back to welding lead. Its better for a lot of purposes, even to replace the factory phone wires or equivalent. Cars with auto trannys sometimes use a solenoid or dash pot. When energized it jumps out. Just a little electromagnet. Usually with and adjustable reach. It allows you to throw a switch on your dash or under the dash and kick up your idle speed. While they keep auto transmissions from stalling, it can increase your engine speed to about whatever you want. Running it at rpm will usually help cool the engine, too. Its a lot classier than running the control cable up over the hood, around the mirror, and then inside to someplace near the driver. Its a quality switch that is designed for high moisture environments. Think the opposite of Lucas prince of darkness. Some work better with synthetic than others. The hook on the end of the line can be replaced. The stock one may or may not make you happy. The big yellow ones supplied with some ropes is just awful. This cycle the one supplied by Warn seems serviceable. I was looking at the offerings from different makers at the "AllFun" in Colorado last summer. Most seem bigger and even less easy to handle. But as luck would have it one of my friends won one in the raffle. Like a good friend, he gave it to me. If you want the glitter type of accessories, look at them all before you buy. To me, heavy is bad. With synthetic, its just not an issue.
