Aly has the Sight from her father and a heavy dose of magical power from her mother. Unlike her mother, she has no inclination of being a knight of the realm, but instead wants to be a spy like her father. However, being the only girl in the family and knowing the world of spywork first hand, her parents keep her only in the back rooms transcribing notes and reports from spies in the field. She wants an opportunity to prove herself. And, boy, does she get one. She makes a deal with the Trickster God: How hard can keeping a bunch of high ranking nobility safe be right? I think it has great promise and if I remember correctly, the next one is really good. You will miss out on a lot of things and be very confused on many of those same things that are presented. This series is a big change for Tamora and her writing. Here she is doing something very different from her past series. It is her first first-person-point-of-view novel as well as her first single book of such a length. Tamora has slowly been getting long, but this has more words in it than even Lady Knight. With this expense I feel she runs into some problems. There was very little internal dialog or thought that was conveyed which made it feel like Tamora had simply switched it from third to first by changing the "she"s to "I"s and kept writing. This is my second read through though the first time I read it was probably fourteen years ago yikes and from the time when I first read it to now, I could only recall a few things that happened. They were at the climax and at the very beginning. Like crows turning human, the guys name is Nawat, and Aly was a slave. I guess that is a lot of what spies do. There was not a thought to her getting caught because she was just so good. There was never that tention or her needing to hide in a closet or behind curtains because someone came back to their rooms early. Most of the time I can bust out a Tamora Pierce series in a month, all four books, but this single book nearly took me a month to read by itself. I do also think that when it came to the "slave situation," things were over simplified. It was very much glossed over with "the Duke and Duchess were very kind to everyone" then the grand generalizations of "bad things happened to other slaves by other masters. It was slow and not as engaging as The Immortals series or Protector of the Small. But there were really good characters. There was a whole cast of different people with different personalities and different things they were good at. Dove and Sarai were dramatically different and very easy to tell apart--whereas sometimes in the past it is hard to tell sisters apart and they almost come in a set. This is not the case for them. The duke and duchess were very different from their peers in that they were kind to everyone in their household, servants, slaves, men-at-arms, etc. They were supposed to be different which made it easy for the reader to like them. I do wish we were given a reason as to why they were so kind to all, not just "because reasons" or "because plot," but something more solid. Kypiroth, the Trickster himself, was fantastic. Very much reminded me of my favorite George in manors and humor. His constant talk of fledgelings, hawks, snakes, and mobbings alongside his devotion for her and his own quirkiness made him endearing and someone I really liked. I do wish the little raka committee that Aly becomes a part of differentiated the people a little bit more. The names got to be kind of obnoxious and it was hard to tell some of the men apart. I do have another qualm with Aly, herself. Yet, she knows better. That rather irked me. She is smarter than practically everyone around her even people who are supposed to be veterans in one thing or another. There are people who die towards the end, but the characters were all prepared for that or plot for the second book needed to happen. I also think her Sight is a cop-out for description. There is no other use for it, really, except to describe things for the reader. Other than that it is almost completely unneeded. She hardly uses it at anyway. I feel like she could have used it better. I wish I liked it more.

Ah it feels so good! See the end of the chapter for more notes. Probably the second one, considering it was so hot that the student had admitted defeat and left his beanie back home. Which was a disgrace, he had an aesthetic to keep up dammit! He was pushing it with the skinny jeans, so something had to give in the name of not having a heat stroke. The whole loose tank and skinny jean look would have to do for the blazer type of day. Pain and suffering aside, it was a nice day out, iced coffee already sweating in his hand, making his way across campus at a languid pace with sunglasses resting innocently on the bridge of his nose. It was nice, the atmosphere heavy and languid. A perfect way to ignore the sting of defeat and the inevitable punishment he and the others would get in practice. A long sip of his coffee, eyes closing in momentary mocha bliss. At least he had this moment of peace, no class until eleven and the entire campus in a hazy sort of pace. A hand tugs on the tiny ponytail at the back of his head, making him yelp indignantly. The culprit skirts to his side when he whips around, pink flashing in the sunlight and a smug face peering up at him. This time, she was determined to keep it pink until the end of the year. Even her sense of style had reduced her to less than either of them usually wore. Her tights were gone, her jacket abandoned and hair donned in the highest bun she can manage with her thick long hair. Hands land on her hips, smirk still strong and eyes glittering with amusement. I called your name like five times! He squawks when to add insult to injury, she snatches the watered down drink out of his hand and takes a sip. It takes a full five minutes for Fetch to ask, his drink now unofficially theirs as they trade it off. It must show on his face before he can shrug, the whistle the shorter releases full of understanding. I spent most of the game with my ass on a bench. That deserves a high-five. So not only am I an embarrassment football wise right now, I got knocked on my ass in front of our whole school. But the school administration was probably more important. A hand comes up to pat his back, it too hot for even a one armed hug to feel good. Everybody has a bad day right? It left him back to his thoughts, no drink to stave off the heat beating on his shoulders and thoughts even more so on his mind. At first, it was flitting things like the reading he needs to get done sometime today, or options for lunch when he makes the trip back home. It got deeper as he made his way around in the blessedly air-conditioned lecture hall. What did happen if they ended up having a bad season? How many bad days could he have before things started getting jeopardized? He liked his life, he had a good major and good friends, his education was paid for. Full ride and all thanks to football. Yeah, the practice sucked. The long days and late nights sucked. He needed to call him. At least he had art. The scratch of charcoal and pencil was always therapeutic, a pleasant distraction from his economics and communications class. That shit got mind-numbing, the amount of staring at his academic reading and typing things even Eugene called gibberish was something that got old fast. But, it was a good major. At the moment he Their professor never particularly gave a straight prompt. Just that their project covered certain concerns she lectured about. But right now there was an odd melancholy in his head that gave him the dreaded art block, leaving him staring at the blank off what of his paper in consideration. It was that dirty doubt of his decisions, which came with the loss. The choices he was making. And sometimes it comes back, late in the night and after a bad test or a bad game. Everyone doubts their major sometimes, the commitment that comes with it. Delsin inhales, straightens up and starts scratching at the paper with his first level pencil. Right for himself, right for Reggie. He can live with getting knocked to the dirt a few times a month and reading walls of text. He decides to cut through the west parking lot, chastising himself for not just parking closest to his last class. That was one thing he missed about being on campus all the time. If you were creative enough, you could find all the shortcuts to your classes from the dorms, depending where they rested. Not now, living with a roommate a few miles from the school, it just required him to get into his sweltering car and try not to whine about how screwed up his cooling system was. He was riding a scholarship, not given a million dollars! Delsin shouts before he can think better, bag slipping off his shoulder as he jerks. It was a motorcycle, turned to the side as if that was the only way to stop the two-wheeler from striking the athlete. Oh this is bad. I apologize for the wait, and thank you guys for reading! Bump and run Summary: Delsin gets one thing clarified, but complicates about twenty other things Notes: Ive sat on this since a few days after the last chapter, just to put it into perspective how bad I am. My friend yelled at me to finish, and here we are. I bow for forgiveness, and hope you enjoy! The guy was better in bright lighting, tan skin flushed from the condensed heat of his helmet, hair stuck flat to his forehead. That little scar the athlete had only gotten a glimpse at is actually slashing from above his top lip all the way to his chin. Jesus christ, they were such a light brown that the sun beating down made them look golden, warm. Nevermind his scowl, brows knit together so tight they looked like it was natural and permanent. The comment makes the scowl fade a little, brows rising in confusion and a little surprise before it comes back. Less pissed and more annoyed. Motorcycles are for middle aged men having a midlife crisis. Oh god, a tattoo. Delsin thought he was stubborn wanting to wear his beanie all the time, but this guy is begging to get overheated; black t-shirt, just loose enough not to constrict him, dark jeans, black helmet. Wanna get a coffee? At least, not a good one. Definitely not anything else and Delsin is not sad about that. His confusion must show on his face, the guy taking pity on his loss for where he came from. The girls call me a yell-leader, I guess to protect my delicate man ego. But I do the same things they do. All dark colors and natural frown, he looked like he should be in his own sport. Like basketball, or hockey. Or hell, no sport at all and just hanging out with the campus rebels, shitting on the establishment and all the wild shit he and Fetch did. But then things kind of Broad shoulders, tan skin, nice butt Those pants look good on you. People do things all the time just because, still. Perkier, fitting the cheerleading model with high energy and a blinding smile and a lot of school spirit. Delsin tries not to stare at how some of them stick up and make his hair look wild. What do you need my name for? One kick of his legs makes the bike scream back to life, the athlete moving out of the way. He waves before he can think about it, watching the bike shrink and disappear around the corner. He has a name. Desmond, Desmond the cheerleader with a terrifying dirt bike. Did he like to be called Des? He wonders what else the guy does. What he likes, what he hates, how old is he? Eugene, bless his heart, jumps out of his skin.

Road rage lands man in jail, Story below. Caitlyn Frisina was reported missing by her family Sunday. The Columbia County Sheriffs Office believes she ran off with a year-old high soccer coach from her school. Caitlyns mother, former County Commissioner Scarlet Frisina, said the family isnt angry with her and hopes to hear from her soon. We love her very much, and it doesnt matter what has happened or where she is, Frisina told the Lake City Reporter Monday afternoon. All were concerned with is her safety. We are looking forward to her getting in contact with us to let us know that shes safe, she added. Caitlyn plays on the Fort White High School girls soccer team and deputies believe she is traveling with Rian Rodriguez, head coach of the boys team. Frisina said she was unaware of any such relationship between them. As far as we know, he was just a friend, she said. Caitlyn appears to have left her home voluntarily through a bedroom window, Smith said. Raymond Alapont, 29, was driving a Chevrolet Silverado pickup on Interstate 75 southbound about 2: According to a release, the driver behind Alapont braked hard to avoid a crash and honked at him. The Lake City Reporter reached out to multiple homeless advocacy groups to learn more about Lotts but was unable to find any information. Lotts was hit while riding a bicycle about Friday at the intersection of Cole Terrace and U. Highway 90 in Lake City. Following the incident, several other news outlets erroneously reported that Lotts was a female. After hitting the man, Bielinski fled the scene by driving west on U. He was found and arrested later in the day. It is unclear how he violated the right of way in the intersection, and FHP has yet to produce a full narrative detailing the incident. sheriffs office. Rodriguez previously worked as an assistant coach under the teenagers father, Ward Frisina. The elder Frisina, who still leads the girls team, resigned as the head coach of the boys team in July, leaving Rodriguez to take over. Rodriguez is not employed in any other capacity by the school district. Neither Rodriguez nor his red Mercury Sable have been seen in several days, Smith said. The state wont likely pursue charges against Rodriguez, since Caitlyn turns 18 in June, Smith said. At this point, we just need to locate them and make sure everyone is safe, Smith said. Investigators could retrieve text records from the phone, but Smith said he doesnt believe its necessary at this point. Weve got a pretty good picture of what happened and what went on, Smith said. Theres not yet any evidence that a crime has taken place, Smith said. The school board will move to suspend Rodriguez pending the results of an investigation, Superintendent Lex Carswell said Monday. The assistant coach, Clayton McPeak, will take over for now, Carswell said. The girls and boys soccer teams play their next games against Lafayette High School tonight. District officials are operating under the assumption that Rodriguez and Caitlyn are romantically involved, Carswell said. Regardless of any sexual or romantic relationship, Rodriguez will be terminated if its proven hed been traveling with her, Carswell said. Hes no longer gonna be allowed to be part of the team, Carswell said. Educators are held to a higher standard. The news of Caitlyns disappearance had a huge impact on social media here, with a CCSO post shared more than 6, times as of Monday evening. After avoiding an accident, Mozell got in the right lane to pass Alapont. While doing so, he looked over and saw Alapont displaying a firearm at him in a threatening manner, according to the release. The weapon was a 9mm handgun. The incident occurred near the the mile marker on I, which is near the U. After seeing the weapon, Mozell backed off and called the authorities. FHP investigators found a firearm in the center console of Alaponts vehicle, and he was arrested. According to FHP, he faces one count of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon without intent to kill. This was not the only road rage incident to take place in Florida on Sunday. An Orlando man was also arrested on two counts of attempted murder after someone opened fire on a car on Floridas Turnpike in Lake County. The sheriffs office was responding to Keys home to assist in a Florida Department of Children and Families investigation. A source described the incident in detail, the report states. Key told the vic tim he had a gift and invited the girl into the bedroom, shutting the doors behind them, according to the report. After giving her a bracelet, Key placed the girl onto a bed and inappropriately touched her, the report states. She managed to get away from Key, according to the report. Key initially denied the accusations against him, the report states. The victims mother called the sheriffs office Nov. Key said he wanted to confess and that the allegations made against him were true, according to the report. He arrived at the sheriffs office for questioning later that day.

Abraham defended her decision to make and sell her porn video, claiming that she wanted to "celebrate [her] awesome body". He explained her choice to re-enter the sex industry was in conflict with the overall message of Teen Mom. I wanted girls who might get pregnant to see there are options out there to move forward with your life and still have goals. She also speaks at local high schools about the challenges of teen pregnancy. Maverick made his appearance on May 31, Maci married Taylor McKinney on October 8, Described as a smart and funny high school senior, she struggles to go back to her normal life after her emotional decision to place Carly for adoption. Catelynn is an integral part of the show, letting prospective teen moms know that there are options. She demonstrates that one can go on after becoming a "birth mom," and being completely mature and selfless by choosing parents for her baby via adoption. During the season, Catelynn comes to terms with being a birth mother, moves in with Tyler and his mother when her mother and her stepfather move into an apartment in another city, and gets engaged to Tyler. She and Tyler both get tattoos in honor of their daughter. Lowell gave birth to their second daughter, Novalee "Nova" Reign, on January 1, She used to be a self-declared party girl, but now discovers she has little time to do anything besides take care of Leah. Amber dropped out of high school when she discovered she was pregnant, but now is working to obtain her GED. The problems have led to physical violence in front of her child, Leah, including an incident where Amber beats him so severely, he is left with permanent scars. Amber eventually gets arrested for domestic violence against Gary. Originally, the wedding was scheduled for October 10, ; however, the wedding plans were suspended when it was revealed that, unbeknownst to Portwood, Baier had several children by different women and had fallen behind on child support payments and that he had reached out to fellow Teen Mom castmates Farrah Abraham and Jenelle Evans before finally pursuing Portwood. Both Portwood and Baier have a love of music and past addiction problems in common, according to Portwood. Following the sixth-season finale and reunion show, Portwood announced she would not be returning to the series. In a series a tweets, Portwood claimed: Which keeps continuing today. They are expecting their first child, a boy named James in On October 20, , The Today Show aired a segment revolving around the depicted domestic abuse in both seasons. She was held without bond in Madison County Jail until her January 27, , hearing on both charges, at which she entered a guilty plea and the court scheduled a sentencing hearing for February 6 of that year. On February 6, Portwood was given a five-year suspended sentence with the provision that all charges would be dropped if she went to and completed rehab. At the ensuing probation violation hearing, the judge in the case declined to reimpose any portion of the suspended sentence, instead requiring Amber to complete 30 days of daily drug tests. She revealed that she has been released from jail early due to good behavior and now has her GED. Portwood also revealed that she was high on prescription and illegal medication for most episodes of Teen Mom and that she is sober with no intent of ever using again. Portwood is working on obtaining a joint custody agreement with her ex-boyfriend Gary Shirley and is trying to focus on being a good mom to her daughter. She also has established an organization to help teens stay off drugs.

How did you meet? Tell us about the proposal. We met at Columbia University while Lindsay was studying Sustainability Management and Ameer was an alumnus of the same program. Aligning with their mutual passion for sustainability, Ameer took Lindsay on a first date to a farm to table and sustainable wine restaurant. They talked non stop for nearly 6 hours and knew right away this was it. Ameer proposed only nine months after that first date, and exactly a year before the wedding weekend at the Whitney Art Museum in NYC. They were walking through a special exhibit of paintings of Paris and discussing their plans to visit one day. It was a typical New York moment and the perfect setting to represent the city they first fell in love. Tell us about your wedding! What was the inspiration behind your day? Did you have a specific theme, style or color palette? Did you incorporate any cultural or religious traditions in any part of your day? Since we are a biracial couple coming from two completely different backgrounds, we wanted to incorporate our love for travel as well as a mix of western and Pakistani culture into the wedding. We did this by naming the tables cities that were important to us, scattering pictures of our travels together throughout, giving the guests Pakistani sweets and dessert and having our guest book be postcards. We had a simple color palette of blue, white, and green and wanted the flowers to be the primary focus of the decor. We wanted to keep the natural beauty of the Historic Highfield grounds and the inside of the house. The vibe was very romantic, but relaxed and laid back so that guests could feel comfortable to roam the beautiful gardens when they wanted. Guests enjoyed yard games and our favorite throwback 90s music during the cocktail hour. We put both bags on each seat during the ceremony, a Pakistani wedding tradition of bagged candies, dried fruit, and nuts that the grooms family gifts to the guests. Lastly, traditional eastern music, mixed with classic wedding dance songs and a few choreographed dances played during the dancing portion of the reception. How did you choose your wedding day look? How did the groom? To my surprise, I ended up picking a mermaid silhouette when I expected to select a looser fitting sheath to match the boho vibe I was going for. I wanted the dress to be simple since I knew I wanted a flower crown to complete the look. I typically go for high necklines in my personal fashion choices, so I knew the halter was the right cut for me. Ameer chose a custom-made suit from Suit Supply, picking out every detail down to the metal hardware on the vest, custom thread in the lapel, and initials stitched inside the pocket. He went for a checkered vest for a pop of style, a green tie and a light blue jacket and pants that would stand out beside the groomsmen in navy. During the reception, he took off his jacket and changed into a second fitted vest that was light blue with a blue pattern on the back. He wore Allan Edmonds brown shoes with a matching belt. We wanted the day to be a party for everyone. We incorporated elements of my husbands culture. He is Cape Verdean African so we had tradition foods from his country for dinner, music, and we had two first dances-one to John Legend "you and I" and the other was by a Cape Verdean artist Jamice "nha princesa". Describe both looks in detail. My look was all about the dress. I found the perfect dress at Vows in W atertown. It was one of the few dresses you had to order and the first dress I ever tried on! It felt like a glove I tried a dozen more dresses and came back to the store a week later to order the Enzoani. It was Trumpet style, lace, and sweetheart neckline. I ordered a Vera Wang belt and had it sewn into the dress. No necklace and drop earrings, fascinator and a tennis bracket my father gave me before he died. My husband is the most fashionable man I know. He had a tux made and tailored for the big day! He was a 3rd year law student and I was a first year. He was asking students to sign up for bar prep classes and I told him that if he could remember my name the next time we saw each other I would sign up with him. This was my way of flirting. A week later, he remembered my name and we have been together ever since. Evandro proposed after a night hanging out with friends in Boston. Little did I know that Evandro had been walking around with the ring for 2 weeks. As the night was ending, and I thought we were getting up to leave, Evandro got down on a knee and asked me to marry him. I burst into tears and almost forgot to answer him. The restaurant seemed to stop, they brought us champagne and we danced to "A ribbon in the sky". Flavio D Photography Wedding Planner: Design, as it relates to a wedding, is so much more than just pretty linens and flowers. Design should tell a cohesive and personal story. I love to work with couples to select each and every element with a focus on personalization. For one couple, this may mean working with them to design a guest book map with custom illustrations of their favorite places, and table numbers named for locations that have been important in their lives. Design should entice all of the senses and should ultimately tell a deeply meaningful story. What does the wedding design process look like? Do couples get to be a part of it? Having a couple be a part of the design process is essential! I love getting to know a couple - where they grew up, their favorite foods, colors, scents, their overall style and vibe, and the working to create elements that showcase all of their favorite things. Aside from creating the design framework, wedding designers are also able to match couples with incredibly talented vendors and artists who can bring unique visions to life. What are your favorite tips or tricks for planning a perfect wedding day? I love finding new and emerging vendors and artists to bring in for weddings. Up and coming vendors are often willing to think outside of the box and to take the biggest design risks. I keep a number of what I call "Hidden Gem Vendors" on speed dial for just the right couple and just the right design opportunity. More and more I am hearing from my couples that they want to find new and unique or previously unused venues. This, coupled with the trend in hosting much smaller, more intimate weddings, sees couples spending more of their budget on areas of planning that mean the most to them rather than hosting large weddings and having less budget to spend on the details. Where do you see couples spending in smart ways and what do you think is a waste of money in terms of planning for a wedding day? I think the biggest mistake a couple can make is to replicate something that they found on Pinterest that may look cool but holds no personal meaning for them. I always remind couples as we plan together - set your priorities for the day and stick to them. All The Little Stories Florals: Whiled Flowers Attire: Bridal Beauty by Madalyn Paper: Peak Event Services Hair Stylist: Leon and Co Video: Happy tears were falling down my cheeks, and I had never felt more lucky or grateful in my entire life. How did you decorate your space for the ceremony and the reception? Was any part of the decor DIY? For the ceremony, I wanted to keep things simple and natural so that our gorgeous floral chuppah could be the star of the show against the dark green background of the trees. I also wanted the natural beauty of our venue to shine through. We also lined the aisle with peach-colored rose petals and hung small floral arrangements on the chairs at the end of the aisles for the perfect added pops of color. For the reception, we kept things simple yet elegant with a little bit of a rustic flair. The linens, plates, and chairs were white, and the centerpieces added the perfect pops of color and cheer - they were placed in mason jars and other more rustic-looking vessels to keep the vibe more casual. We also had small votive candles surrounding the arrangements. The floral decor for our sweetheart table was probably my favorite part - a heaping and gorgeous display of peonies, roses, delphinium and lush greenery. How did you choose your wedding day look? How did the groom? I wanted something flowy, romantic, and soft. But most importantly, I wanted a dress I could twirl in.
