As a community of school counselors, we lost a wonderful member of our tribe on June 15. You can also submit photos to our Google folder. Share your pride and all your hard work! The resources alone are well worth the cost. The annual conference was held this year in Los Angeles and it did not disappoint. The hall was filled with many vendors and free resources, including career presenters. You will see there are over 100 files. You can hover over the title to see the topic, or look at the title on the powerpoint. Many people also included their contact information if you have more questions. If you have a blog, social media page, or other resource you think other school counselors would like, please share it with me! This handy resource can help with calendar and event planning. The concordance tables are designed to be used by colleges, K-12 education professionals, scholarship organizations, students, policymakers, and others to inform policies, processes, and decisions. They are the only official concordance tables between the ACT and the SAT and should be used as the single source of reference moving forward when comparing scores on the two tests. These tables replace the concordance tables that were released in Start Planning Now for Professional Learning. Mark your calendar and start the approval process now for some great professional learning this year. New School Counselor Institute If you are a new school counselor or a school counselor who could use a refresh, you will find support and customized learning at the New School Counselor Institute. The six-part series dives into the skills and resources with which every school counselor should be familiar. Past participants said they enjoyed the activities, learned about new resources, and were grateful to know they are not alone in continuing to learn and grow. Download the flier and register. Registration will open Sept. Start thinking about what you would like to present! This day is a success because practicing school counselors share the great work they are doing. The event is Oct. The annual event is designed to meet the unique needs of district team members, including cabinet level leaders, site administrators, classroom teachers, counselors, and parents. Author Zaretta Hammond will kick off the event with a keynote speech on the tenets of her book, Culturally Responsive Teaching and the Brain. There are also several featured speakers leading minute sessions such as Horacio Sanchez on school climate, Dr. Loui Lord Nelson on universal design for learning, and Dr. Nancy Dome on culturally competent learning environments. Attendees can choose from more than 70 topics including effective technology integration, social-emotional learning, strategies for student transition, and college and postsecondary training. Attendees will learn best practices from schools, discover new resources for students and educators, acquire valuable data interpretation strategies, and create a comprehensive assessment plan. The event is Sept. Participants can attend Oct. California Community College Resources – Career Pathways The California Community Colleges launched a new campaign to help students explore, locate, and apply to any of the community colleges with more than 100 career pathway programs in California. They have created a new free app for students called.
