What is free camping? Free camping is camping overnight in your RV or tent at a location where you do not have to pay. Most free campsites are not in developed campgrounds. Free camping is sometimes called boondocking, primitive camping, dry camping, and dispersed camping. What do I need to camp for free? Water for drinking and washing Garbage bags Toilet paper and a shovel Camp chairs and a table Permits if applicable A working knowledge of Leave No Trace principles is essential to camping responsibly in free campsites, including how to dispose of waste properly. Where can I find free camping? Free camping abounds through the United States and Canada, but not all free camping is created equal. From Walmarts to national forests, there is a wide range of convenience, beauty, and enjoyment to be found with regard to free camping. National Forests National forests are public lands owned by the Forest Service or another managing government agency. National forests exist in almost every state in the US, and though not all allow dispersed camping, many especially in the western US do. Camping in a national forest is suited not only for RVs and vans, but for tent camping as well. Most national forests that allow dispersed camping have a 14 day stay limit, though it can vary from as short a time as one day to as long as 30 days. Check the local regulations by either stopping in at the nearest ranger station, or calling ahead before you arrive. While few national parks allow for free camping, many national parks are bordered by national forest or grasslands. Drive a few minutes out of the park, pull into a quiet spot in the national forest, and enjoy the solitude. The BLM manages land for a number of uses, including recreation, grazing, logging, and resource extraction. Free camping on BLM is usually capped at 30 days, but can be shorter or longer depending on the location. BLM land is suitable for RVs, vans, and sometimes but not always for tent campers. Because of the variety of uses on BLM land, you may wake up with a herd of cattle or a band of sheep in your campsite, so it pays to do a bit of research ahead of time to know what you might find. State parks, city parks, and county parks sometimes maintain free camping areas. So do entities like water management districts, trust lands, conservation areas. Stay limits, access, amenities, permitting requirements, and the types of camping that are allowed at these sites vary greatly. Reading reviews on Campendium, and contacting the agency that manages these free campsites, will help to determine whether they are right for you. Who is ready for some free camping in British Columbia? It is staying overnight in a developed area that allows for parking through the night. Examples of places that may allow overnight parking are Walmarts, truck stops, rest areas, and town parking lots. Rules and limitations vary widely for overnight parking. A Walmart in one town may allow overnight parking, but the next town over will not. Be sure to read all posted signage and, if it is a business and they are open, go inside and ask permission from the manager. Overnight parking locations almost universally do not allow tent camping, so are best suited for those staying in RVs or vans. Overnight parking can be loud, bright, and busy. Some places can also be on the shady side. Trust your gut, do your research on Campendium by reading past reviews and tips, and then make your decision. Free Camping Near Me.

Share on Facebook Hook up your travel trailer and visit one of the more than sites in the national park system covering nearly every state in the country. At the time of publication, nearly of the parks provide camping facilities where you can stay for up to 14 days at a time while you explore the scenic wonders contained in the park. Amenities are basic in most parks, with restrooms, fire rings and picnic tables standard equipment throughout the country. Travel Restrictions Due to the remote and wild nature of many parks, travel with a trailer is usually limited on the narrowest curvy mountain roads. Each park has an online map denoting any area where there are size restrictions. Permitted RV lengths and trailer length are usually not always the same, and some roads permit RVs while prohibiting trailers. Use caution if you decide to proceed on roads where travel with your trailer is permitted but not recommended. Make sure your trailer is within the towing capacity for your vehicle before attempting these roads, or you can end up losing control on a steep downhill. Campground Restrictions Most national park campgrounds were developed in the s by the Civilian Conservation Corp when the majority of people camped in tents. On average, most parks accommodate trailers up to 27 feet long; others are suitable for units up to 40 feet in length. You can only camp in your trailer in a designated campsite within a national park; no dispersed camping is allowed along roadways or in parking areas. You can use a generator in many national parks, providing they are quieter than 60 decibels at 50 feet and you run them only during designated hours. Some campgrounds are designated generator-free, where use is prohibited at all times. As a result, bears are common visitors to many national parks. Strict regulations regarding storage of food, garbage and scented items are standard. You can store your food in a hard-sided trailer, provided it is not left out where a bear peeking through the window can see it. In some parks with a history of bear problems, this rule extends to food-related utensils, cookware and coolers, even if they are clean. Campers with tent trailers and pop-up trailers must store food in bear boxes where provided, hang your food 15 feet above the ground and 4 feet from any tree at least feet from camp, or keep it in a wildlife-proof container more than feet from your sleeping area. Pets A trailer is one of the most convenient ways to travel with your pet, especially if your dog is large, or you have more than one. The National Park service allows dogs in its campgrounds at no additional charge, providing you keep it on a leash that is 6 feet in length or shorter and clean up after it.

GS levels indicate the rate of pay for most federal government positions. For current salary information for these grades, check with any federal agency or the Office of Personnel Management in that geographic area where you desire employment. Recruitment for certain positions is centralized: Applying for these jobs requires a special computerized form, a , Application for Seasonal Employment. All applicants must complete the required forms and file them with the Seasonal Employment Program during the specified filing period. The filing period for winter employment is June 1 through postmarked by July The filing period summer employment is November 15 through postmarked by January Seasonal jobs are limited. The number of work campers applying far outnumbers the position available every year. This is especially true for those applying for camp jobs at the larger, well-known national known parks. In the summer season, when most seasonal employees are hired, employment opportunities are extremely competitive. However, there are excellent opportunities, especially for applicants who have qualifying law enforcement experience or training. Most seasonal positions require irregular hours of work, including weekends, holidays, and evenings. Most seasonal employees are required to wear the official Park Service uniform. Specific requirements and ordering information are contained in the employment package sent to successful applicants. For positions requiring a uniform, an allowance is allotted which partially covers its cost. Address specific questions about housing, area living conditions, and similar matters to the park or office where you desire employment. Some positions are filled by experienced seasonal employees who have worked previously for the NPS. Office of Personnel Management regulations require that veterans of the United States Armed Forces may be given preference. Information, including the necessary forms will be sent to you when your letter, e-mail message, or telephone inquiry is received. Other types of positions may be available in NPS parks and offices. Contact the park or office where you are interested in working for information. The National Park Service started in and today has sites. Its purpose is to preserve and manage natural, historical, and recreational areas. Every year, millions of people from the United States and abroad visit our national park areas. The National Park Service is a bureau of the U. Department of the Interior. Do not confuse it with the U. Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture.
