If the document still opened with Word, you probably did not read carefully enough -- go back to the part where I say to follow this tutorial. Open the "word" folder as seen in the above screenshot. You should be seeing a "media" folder: These are the original images that were inserted in the documents, regardless of the size in which they appear when viewing your document. Unfortunately, the picture is copied in the same size as it appears in Word. This is obviously not the best way to go, but it can be easier and faster than the first option I described earlier. First, open your document in Word, then save it as a Web page: When offered to select the format, make sure to choose the "Web page" format The "Web page" option on the other hand exports the original images as well as thumbnails. Once the file is saved as a Web page, you will find that two new icons appear in your folder: Open the folder to reveal the images both in original and thumbnail sizes: You can now copy or save those files to other folders of your computer. In my opinion, we should be able to just right-click an image and see a "Save image as
