Excerpt from Canada First: A Memorial of the Late, William a Foster, Q. C Name of Canada First. The aim of Canada First was never very clearly defined.

Some time ago, Eldon Sentner approached me about putting abbreviated obituaries in the newsletter for those who had passed away during the week, and which appeared in Island newspapers. I have long wanted to do this, but lacking a volunteer until now, it was too time consuming to do myself. Eldon volunteered, and this is the result. Act fast to see the original obituary, these are only posted to the funeral home web sites for a short time. Obituary indexes will be updated weekly, in the newsletter, and here on the site. Obituaries beginning June, will be done by Alice Homer - homerabaa gmail. If you can not get the obit from the funeral home site following June 1, , email Alice at homerabaa gmail. Obituaries for the current year only are kept. If you see a death notice that mentions PEI in the notice from on or off-Island, please email it to Alice to include it in the weekly listings even if it is a prior notice. If it is older notice, send it to Alice at the above address and she will show some basics in the weekly listing and place the notice in the appropriate year of death notice listing.

A grandson of late loyalist settlers on the Bay of Quinte, William Canniff grew up in relative affluence on the family farm north of Belleville. His father and elder brothers also owned and operated a grist-mill and a sawmill. As the youngest surviving child in a family of nine, he was able to persuade his Wesleyan Methodist parents to send him to Victoria College in Cobourg, after he had completed his primary education in local schools. With medical education in transition from apprenticeship to formal classroom training, Canniff and his schoolfellows were encouraged to seek further clinical education in the United States during summer breaks and to continue their studies in Europe after qualifying to practise. In he returned to Canada, married, and set up practice in the Belleville area. Initially appointed an instructor in pathology, he quickly became a professor of surgery and one of the staff responsible for serving clients at the dispensary Rolph and his second wife had established in Canniff had remarried in and was now left without a secure economic base for his growing family. But it was to the Army of the Potomac that Canniff, who had visited Northern field hospitals in , turned following his resignation. His service was brief, however, for in June he resigned and returned to Belleville, to re-establish his practice. In the years that followed he completed the research and writing of his History of the settlement of Upper Canada Ontario , with special reference to the Bay Quinte Toronto, , a project he claimed to have undertaken in at the instigation of the short-lived society. In Canniff published in Toronto his History of the province of Ontario. A year later, however, the literary surgeon assisted Foster in organizing the Canada First party as an antidote to partyism, an example of which was the Pacific Scandal. When Rolph was forced to retire in , Canniff was appointed dean. In spite of a dynamic program to construct a new school near the TGH, Victoria lost students, and the revenue it needed to survive, when many of its senior staff joined the rival Trinity Medical School. He nevertheless retained his consulting position at the TGH and continued to present medical papers and publish articles describing his cases. Canniff displayed both progressive and reactionary responses to aspects of medical professionalization. As chairman of the medical section of the Canadian Institute in 1871, he had begun to campaign for federal, provincial, and municipal public-health legislation. Like other conservative surgeons, he openly expressed, in articles and addresses from at least , his scepticism about the effectiveness of Listerian antisepsis. Such opposition did not prevent his colleagues from electing him president of the Canadian Medical Association in From this position Canniff continued his long-running efforts to obtain federal funding for the collection of urban mortality statistics, in emulation of British practice. He was rewarded in when the Macdonald government introduced conditional grants for this purpose. To qualify, cities had to have local boards of health and salaried health officers. In addition to his work as health officer, Canniff continued to pursue his interests in Canadian history and military medicine. In he presided over the loyalist centennial celebrations at Adolphustown and Toronto and started to collect the material for his final major work, The medical profession in Upper Canada, 1771 After his resignation from the medical officership, Canniff tried to rebuild his private practice but was unsuccessful as a result of the depression of the early s and, presumably, his traditional approach to curative medicine. Family lore suggests that alcoholism contributed to his departure. In spite of these difficulties and increasing physical infirmity, Canniff had retained his interest in Canadian history. Although the United Empire Loyalist Association of Ontario made him an honorary member in , neither it nor the Ontario Historical Society had the money to support publication. Shortly after Canniff and his elder brother, Philip Flagler, returned to Belleville, where they lived together until William entered the newly opened House of Refuge in His medical career demonstrates the growing importance of professional training and organizations, and the development of new areas of specialization, most notably public health. Nevertheless, in the course of his historical work he
